CHIVERS' BOOK ISSUE INDICATOR AND CHARGING SYSTEM.

That this Indicator is steadily gaining ground is shown by the fact that it has been adopted by the following Public Libraries:

BRADFORD.
BROMSGROVE.
CAMPBELTON, N.B.
CARLISLE.
DEWSBURY.
DERBY.
GRIMSBY.
HYDE.
JOHANNESBURG, S.A.
LANCASTER.

The Chivers' Indicator,
4,000 numbers.

The other Indicator,
4,000 numbers.

LEIGH.
LUTON.
LYDNEY INSTITUTE.
NEATH.
OLDHAM E. C. S. L.
PERTH.
RAWMARSH.
REDDITCH LIT. INST.
SOUTHPORT.
ST. HELEN'S (2).
SYDNEY, N.S.W.
TYNEMOUTH.
WIGAN.
WORKINGTON.
WALLASEY.

For New Libraries adopting an Indicator this is undoubtedly the best. It is not claimed on its behalf that it is of the widest adoption, for it is comparatively new. The advantages over the devices hitherto most frequently used are:

1. That it is much smaller.
2. The figures are much clearer.
3. Declares overdues automatically.
4. Lends itself more readily to statistical purposes.
5. Is quicker in operation.
6. Is cheaper and costs less to maintain.
7. Keeps clean and bright.
8. It does everything other Indicators do, and supplements them where they have proved weak.
9. Apart from its own Charging System, it is a device which shows in smallest space books IN and OUT. This Indicator is alone in adapting itself to any system of book-keeping or charging which the Librarian has in use and desires to retain.

FULL PARTICULARS, DIAGRAMS, AND ILLUSTRATIONS WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION.

— The — Publishers' Circular

ST. DUNSTAN'S HOUSE, E.C.

January 4, 1901.

TO OUR READERS.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR has so far justified its title; it came into existence the same year as the Queen came to the throne, and for nearly two-thirds of the nineteenth century it has been the medium for recording the title, size, price, and date, of every book issued by the publishers of the United Kingdom, as well as of the leading publications issued in the United States of America.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR is the source from which has been compiled an Annual Catalogue, alphabetically arranged, of each year's productions for sixty-three years; and again, from these Annual Catalogues, and from other sources, have been compiled the five volumes of the English Catalogue.

These five English Catalogues, with their supplementary annual volumes, practically range over the greater part of the nineteenth century, for they embrace not only the whole of the books published during the reign of Her Majesty—or rather from 1835 to 1900—for although the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR did not commence till 1837, the first volume of the Catalogue includes the years 1835 and 1836. The subsequent annual volumes, with the one about to be published, make a comprehensive, without claiming to be an absolutely perfect, Bibliographical Record of the Books published during the last Sixty-five Years. The old London Catalogue, 1800 to 1827, gives an average of about 588 new books per annum, or a total of 15,888 new books in twenty-seven years. The books recorded in the English Catalogue, 1835 to 1900, will give an average of about 5,000 books a year.

Apart from the voluminous catalogues of the British Museum, which are only now completed, and which are quite inaccessible to the general public, there is absolutely no other uniform resource for anyone seeking information about English books but these Catalogues and their Index Volumes.

As regards the British Museum Catalogue only 250 sets are printed, and of these only eighty sets are circulated, at a price which renders them quite unattainable by any but the most wealthy; it is comprised in about 600 volumes, containing the titles only of over two million books; these 600 volumes if taken at 4s. a volume, will cost £120 for the whole. The Subject Index is not yet commenced, and is not likely to be completed in less than fifteen years. Of course this stupendous work embodies information about books of all languages, all countries, and all ages.

The five volumes of the English Catalogue and the four index volumes contain certain references to over 300,000 titles of books in the English tongue, covering only a comparatively limited period and about the same number of references in the Index Volumes. Their combined published price was originally £19. 7s., but it unfortunately happens that the two first volumes and the first Index Volume have long since been out of print and are now becoming very scarce. It would be a bold undertaking for anyone to reprint them.

If the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR has thus justified its title and been of some real value in the world of letters, it is mainly owing to the very cordial support which from its beginning has always been given to it by the Publishers and Booksellers of England, Scotland, and Ireland, for without their support it could not have continued its useful career.

The beginning of a new year and a new century is surely a fitting time for the conductors of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR to express their sincere thanks to English Publishers and to Booksellers throughout the world for their continued co-operation; it may be truly said that there is no corner of the world where English literature is cared for that the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR does not reach, and never during its long career has its circulation been so wide-spread, or its usefulness so highly appreciated as it is to-day.

The aim of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR has always been to keep pace with the times; thus about nine years ago it was found desirable to convert it from a fortnightly to a weekly journal, and to increase its size. A few years ago the quite original system started in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR in 1857 of combining title and index in one alphabet was amplified, and has proved highly satisfactory to booksellers and librarians, who can by its aid find any book they want, provided they know either the name of the author or the subject, (it is not necessary that they should know both). The same system, giving the full title, has been adopted in Volume V. of the Catalogue, thus rendering an index volume unnecessary. Second-hand booksellers and those who sell or buy out-of-print books have found the pages devoted to Book Wants increasingly useful.

It is with some degree of pardonable pride that the conductors of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR have thus been able to sketch rapidly its history and past achievements. As to its future they look forward with confidence to the continued support of their friends, not only among Publishers and Booksellers, but also an increasingly large class of Book-readers and Book-buyers who are numbered among its subscribers.

The conductors of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR hope and believe that the beginning of The Twentieth Century will be the beginning of a new and long-continued era of prosperity to Authors, Publishers, and Booksellers, whose combined efforts contribute so much to the education and happiness of the people.

SKETCHES OF THE OLD BOOK-SELLERS.

It occurred to us that an account of some of the old booksellers would be interesting to our readers, and we are glad to say that Mr. Edward Marston has kindly agreed to put together some notes which will appear under the title of 'Sketches of Booksellers of Other Days.' No. 1, on Jacob Tonson, commences this week.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Sir John Tenniel no longer connected with Punch! The announcement of Sir John's retirement will be heard with regret all the world over. For nearly half a century he has illustrated all the 'epoch-making' events in the world's history, and has added to our national joys and helped to lessen our national griefs by his powerful and graceful cartoons.

Mr. John Murray has some very important books in the press, including: 'The Reminiscences of Sir Edward Malet.' Sir Edward was for over ten years our Ambassador at Berlin, and previously had so ably represented us at Washington, Constantinople, Paris, Pekin, Athens, Rome, &c. Sir Edward was in Paris during the terrible days of the Commune, and his reminiscences will be eagerly looked for. Another scarcely less important work promised by Mr. Murray is 'The Correspondence of Lady Sarah Lennox,' whom George III. asked to marry him. She was afterwards three times married, and by her second husband was the mother of Sir Charles, Sir William, and Sir George Napier. The papers belong to Lady Ilchester, who will edit them, and they will be illustrated by many of the splendid pictures at Holland House. Colonel H. Mackinnon is to give an account of the services of the C.I.V. in South Africa. He was Commandant of the corps, and this will be the official record of the fine work of the City Imperial Volunteers. Then Mr. Murray has Vol. V. of the 'Byron Letters' nearly ready for publication, and a remarkable novel of Russian life called 'On Peter's Island,' by Mr. A. R. Ropes, nephew of the author of the well-known 'Campaign of Waterloo.'

Messrs. Rivington announce the early issue by them of the following work written by a Russian bishop: 'The Soothsayer Balaam; or, the Transformation of a Sorcerer into a Prophet,' by the Very Rev. Seraphim, Bishop of Ostrojsk. 'The aim of the work is to give a satisfactory explanation of a small portion of the Holy Scriptures, taken from chapters xxii.-xxv. of the Book of Numbers. The substance and importance of the events described in these chapters, and the characters of the persons who play a prominent part in the narrative, form a problem the solution of which is both difficult and interesting. The prophecies of Balaam serve, by their form and contents, as one of the most convincing proofs of the authenticity of the Pentateuch, an opinion which has been corroborated by the most trustworthy theologians.'

Messrs. Stevens & Sons, Limited, of 119 and 120 Chancery Lane, London, have in the press a revision of 'Thring's Criminal Law of the Navy,' under the title of 'A Manual of Naval Law and Court-Martial Procedure.' While adhering to the plan of the old work, the revisers (Fleet Paymaster Charles Gifford, C.B., Staff Paymaster Harrison Smith, and Mr. J. E. R. Stephens, of the Middle Temple) have enlarged the scope of the work, and have increased the size of the page to make a more convenient volume. The book will contain the latest revision of court martial procedure.

The new volume for January in the Temple Cyclopedic Primers will be 'Australasia, the Commonwealth and New Zealand,' by Arthur W. Jose. The book tells the story of Australasian settlement, dwelling particularly upon points (a) of Imperial moment, (b) which explain the form and divisions of the Commonwealth, (c) which throw light on the character of Australians and the lines of their development. But mainly it tries to be a story, separate chapters being added to deal with Constitutions, Aborigines, and Social Development.

In view of the Alfred Millenary, which will be celebrated this year, Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. very shortly are issuing a new volume, entitled 'Alfred, the West Saxon, England's King,' by the Rev. D. Macfadyen, M.A. It will contain some very interesting illustrations.

Messrs. Scott, Greenwood & Co. have just ready for publication a translation by Mr. F. T. Addyman of M. Villon's important 'Practical Treatise on the Leather Industry.'

The following announcement is from the Jan. 3 No. of To-Day: 'There are many prize competitions; some few are legal; some have prizes worth trying for. To-Day proposes to open shortly a competition which, in the opinion of eminent counsel, is absolutely legal, and to offer a prize which is believed to eclipse all previous records in the history of the world's Press. There will be only one prize, but no one can afford to miss the chance of winning it. We shall give full particulars later on.'

Among the articles in the January number of the Nineteenth Century and After which will attract general attention is one on the position of our Admiralty as regards submarine boats. There is an uneasy feeling in the country respecting the apparent neglect of our Naval Advisers as regards these novel war-ships, and this article will not help to remove it. 'On Spion Kop,' by one who was present, claims to be the first accurate account of 'the most desperate battle which has been fought by British troops in the last half-century.'

The second volume of Mr. W. S. Taggart's work on 'Cotton Spinning' (in the new edition published by Messrs. Macmillan) brings the subject down to the end of the preparing processes, including all the machinery and manipulations between the card and the self-actor frame.

'A New History of the Book of Common Prayer with a Rationale of its Offices' is a revision of Procter's well-known book in the light of subsequent liturgical studies, executed by the Rev. W. H. Frere. In addition to considerable rewriting of the history of the Prayer Book since the Reformation, Mr. Frere has greatly expanded the account of the old Service Books from which it descended, and of the old Services. Certain portions of the original work have been omitted, where the information contained had become available in fuller form elsewhere; but all the information for which it was necessary to turn to Procter will still be found in the work.

Harper & Brothers announce that during the coming year they will publish once a month an American novel by an American author—for the most part by new writers, men and women of modern ideas, youthful vigour, and fresh imagination. In scene and character these twelve stories will be representative of conditions in every part of the country. The first of the series, to be published early in January, will be 'Eastover-Court House,' by Kenneth Brown, a vivid picture of rural life of to-day in Virginia, by a writer thoroughly familiar with the country and its people.—N.Y. Publishers' Weekly.

Temple Bar for January contains (besides the serials from the well-contrasted pens of Mr. Crockett and Mr. and Mrs. Egerton Castle) a vivid and minute account of the 'Siege of Ladysmith,' by Mr. Balfour, a young surgeon. His simple straightforward narrative, given in letters home, shows the courage, endurance, and hard work required from non-combatants as well as combatants during that long struggle. An amusing and original story, 'The Apotheosis of Anne,' adds variety to an interesting number.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish next week Mr. C. D. Collett's 'Taxes on Knowledge: the Story of their Origin and Repeal,' in two volumes in his 'Reformer's Bookshelf.' Also a book entitled 'England's Neglect of Science,' by Professor Perry, of the Royal College of Science, South Kensington. The author attacks the educational system, and whatever arguments he takes up he sets forth in a clear fashion, which will be appreciated whether the reader is convinced or not.

A dainty series of belles lettres is promised immediately, bound in flexible leather, gilt tops, headbands and silk markers, consisting of works such as 'Words of Wellington,' maxims and opinions of the great Duke; 'Religio Medici,' by Sir Thomas Browne; 'Vathek,' an Oriental romance, by William Beckford; 'Reflections,' or moral sentences and maxims of the Duke de la Rochefoucauld, and several other well-known works. The title of the series will be 'Choice Classics for Collectors,' the price half-a-crown net, and the publishers Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd.

'Book-keeping for Business Men,' by J. and S. W. Thornton, is a work designed to explain the principles of good book-keeping and their application in such a way as to enable the young trader to construct, keep, and balance a set of account-books suited to his business. The first four chapters explain the principles of double entry. Then in the 'model system' which follows Reader and Thornton go into partnership and open a set of books. Transactions are detailed, the accounts of which show how to meet book-keeping 'difficulties' of all kinds.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

The 'Tägliche Rundschau' states that Prof. Hans Meyer, head of the Bibliographisches Institut, Leipzig, has just come into possession of a great number of letters and manuscripts of Heinrich Heine, which had hitherto belonged to the writer's widow, who had inherited them. The most important of these acquisitions are the first manuscript of 'Atta Troll,' filling two hundred pages covered with erasures; a hundred pages of poems; and a large portion of the 'Rabbi von Bacharach.' Of the letters there are more than a thousand, which show Heine's life in quite a new light.

Paul Bourget publishes through Plon, Nourrit & Co. a volume of short stories containing 'Un Homme d'affaires,' 'Dualité,' 'Un Réveillon,' 'L'Outrage.'

A biography of the late King of Italy entitled 'Il Re Martire: the Life and Reign of Humbert I., 1844-1900,' by Ugo Pesei, has just been published by M. Hoepli, Milano; who also publishes 'Matteo Bandello, Italian Life in a novel of the sixteenth century'; 'F. Nobili Vitelleschi,' of the civil and political history of the Papacy; and 'Alberto Mario, Scritti politici.' This edition of Alberto Mario's political writings is edited and prefaced by Giosue Carducci.

On entering Mukden, the sacred city of Manchuria, the Russian troops found several libraries containing innumerable manuscripts. Most of these were Chinese moral essays of little interest; but there were also found several thousand volumes relating to the history of the East, about which so little is known. But, most interesting of all, a number of Greek and Latin manuscripts have also been found.

'Mémorial de la Librairie Française' states that a mission consisting of archaeologists and Latin and Greek scholars is about to set out for Mukden to study these treasures. They are of opinion that the works in question were stolen in Europe during the great invasion of the Mongolian Tartars in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. These manuscripts are from Kieff, Poland, Germany, and other parts of Eastern Europe. It is expected also to find several texts hitherto considered entirely lost, such as the integral text of Petronius or, perhaps, the entire works of Polybius and Livy.

There is much talk in Paris of the new prison at Fresne, which is on the silent and cellular system. One of its latest inmates, the anarchist Libertad, whose name betokens his southern origin, has been interviewed on the subject of his stay in Fresne. His greatest grievances appear to have been the obligation on the prisoner to keep his cell clean—or, as he terms it, the torture of cleanliness (la supplice de la propreté), and the lack of new and attractive books to read. When asked if books were lent to the prisoners, he replied: 'Yes, but they are hardly interesting. They are old books of travel—such a choice is ironical—or works on Christian morals dating from 1830. Besides, you are only allowed to read on Sundays. Every other day you must work without intermission in your cell until half-past eight, when the electric light is turned off. On Sunday, too, you are taken to Mass or to a lecture. As for me, having stated I was of no religion, I was sent to the lecture. The lecturer, when nobody could see and who saw nobody, because Fresne is on the system of complete isolation, gave us a course of lectures on morals which bored me fearfully. He would have done better to have spoken on the social question (!).'

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

NO. 1.—JACOB TONSON.

Of all the booksellers of the olden time whose figures stand out from the depths of the shadowy past perhaps the most conspicuous is that of JACOB TONSON. Doubtless there have lived in the past centuries hundreds of old booksellers, more worthy, more learned, and more beloved in their generation than Jacob Tonson, who, after pursuing the even tenour of their way, have passed into the shadowy world, not unwept but at least unsung and unrecorded in the pages of history, as unknown to posterity as if they had never lived; their good deeds lie buried with their bones, and they did no evil that should live after them; that, indeed, is the common fate of many of the worthiest of human beings.

JACOB TONSON

(From the portrait by Kneller)

Only a few here and there of the shadows of old booksellers have been evolved from the surrounding darkness, either through their prominent connection with some celebrated writer who may have belauded or besmirched them into lasting fame or lasting infamy, or else their earthly careers have been brought to light by the industry of such writers as the late Mr. Peter Cunningham, Mr. Charles Knight, Mr. W. Roberts, or Mr. Henry Curwen—and thus it was that the life and doings of Jacob Tonson have been carried down for more than two hundred years.

The 'Dictionary of National Biography' devotes considerable space to the Tonsons (for there were three of them) and other old book-sellers; much of the same information somewhat differently told is to be found in each of the authorities above mentioned, but the 'Dictionary of National Biography' is the most concise. It is from these authorities that the information given below has been mostly obtained.

Jacob Tonson, like John Gilpin, was born 'a citizen of famous London town,' about the year 1656—the youngest of two sons of Jacob Tonson, barber-surgeon and citizen, who died in the year 1668, leaving £100 to each of his two sons and three daughters. 'Ah! Jacob,' once said his father to him, 'if I hadn't a noble profession for you to follow I should like to see you a bookseller.' Young Jacob had a decided aversion to the business carried on 'under the pole.' He had employed most of his holiday hours in reading plays and poems, and so two years afterwards he was apprenticed, on the fifth of June, 1670, to Thomas Basset, bookseller ('probably in Little Britain' says W. Roberts). He was then 14 years old, and after seven years he was admitted to his freedom in the Stationers' Company, and immediately afterwards started in business with his capital of £100, following the example of his elder brother who had commenced business as a bookseller the year before in a shop within Gray's Inn Gate. Jacob's shop was for many years under 'The Judges' Head,' which he set up as his sign in Chancery Lane, close to the corner of Fleet Street. Had he begun business a few years earlier he would have been a near neighbour of Izaak Walton, but they probably never met, for old Izaak was nearly 90 years of age, and had left Fleet Street before young Jacob started, and one can hardly imagine two so widely divergent characters as the tall and dignified Izaak and the short 'bull-faced' Jacob.

Walton's printer and publisher was Richard Marriott, in St. Dunstan's Churchyard close by.

Jacob Tonson was very ambitious of getting in touch with authors of the highest standing, and in his twenty-third year, 1679 (four years before Walton died), he made the bold venture of purchasing Dryden's 'Troilus and Cressida' for £20, which sum he had to borrow; and thus became Dryden's publisher, and with Dryden he seems to have continued on more or less friendly terms till the death of the poet. Before this year he had published some of the plays of Otway and Tate. At this period he is imagined by Charles Knight, who endeavours to realise the shadow of the figure and deportment of the young bookseller in his twenty-third year as short and stout, and twenty years later Pope calls him 'little Jacob.' It was not till after his death that he was immortalised in 'The Dunciad' as 'left-legged Jacob.'

It was in 1683 that Tonson became the purchaser from Brabazon Ailmer, the assignee of Samuel Simmons, of one half of his right in 'Paradise Lost,' and the remaining half in 1690. Milton at that time was very unpopular, and Tonson waited four years after his purchase before he ventured to bring it out by subscription. Dryden had spoken of it as one of the greatest, most noble, and most sublime poems which either the age or nation had produced. It was an immediate success—and thus Jacob Tonson identified himself with Milton by making 'Paradise Lost' popular.

He brought out the fourth edition in 1688, in folio, with a portrait by White. It was as a motto under this portrait that Dryden wrote the well-known lines:

Three poets in three distant ages born,
Greece, Italy, England, did adorn,
The first in loftiness of mind surpassed;
The next in majesty, in both the last.
The force of nature could no further go,
To make a third she joined the former two.

In 1684 he brought out a volume of miscellaneous poems under Dryden's editorship. Other volumes followed in 1685, 1693, 1694, and 1703. The series was called indifferently Dryden's or Tonson's Miscellany.

Dryden's 'Translation of Virgil' was published by Tonson in July 1697 by subscription, and its publication gave rise to serious financial differences between the poet and his publisher. It has been stated that on one occasion, the bookseller having refused to advance money, the poet sent him the following triplet, with the significant message: 'Tell the dog that he who wrote these lines can write more:—'

With leering looks, bull-faced, and freckled fair;
With two left legs, and Judas-coloured hair,
And frowzy pores, that taint the ambient air.'

Roberts says: 'Its success was from the first a foregone conclusion.' Pope has stated that Dryden cleared every way about £1,200 by his 'Virgil.'

Subsequently author and publisher became more friendly, and on the publication of the volume of 'Fables'—which contained the celebrated 'Ode to St. Cecilia,' commonly known as 'Alexander's Feast,' for which he paid the author two hundred and fifty guineas, to be made up to £300 when a second edition was demanded—Dryden wrote to Tonson: 'I hope it has done you service and will do more.' Dryden died in May 1700.

THE BOOKS OF 1900.

From the table on another page it will be seen that there is a reduction of 218 in the past year's production of new books as compared with 1899. The output is 428 less than that of 1897. Works directly on the Boer war number 197 for the year, 102 for the last six months. Works on war in general, by land or sea, and on South Africa or people connected with it, are large in number. Perhaps more than 300 books have been suggested to their publishers or their writers by the present war. Probably, then, the publication of general works has been at least 500 less than in 1899, and more than 700 less than in 1897.

DOOLEY ILL.

'Mr. Peter Dunne has typhoid fever, and there will be a hiatus in the discourses of Dooley in this journal until he gets well. Why there has not been a hiatus in Dooley long since—why Dooley has not run out of opinions and gumption and remarkable turns of language—is something that many of us have wondered at. But Dooley is a deep well, and is fed by springs besides. There is no sign of drought about him. He is as amusing as sound, and as wise in his generation when he talks of China as when he talked of Spain. What he has to say about Reform or the Historical Novel is as engaging and remunerative as what he had to say about Cousin George. Nothing but real sense can last as Dooley has lasted. Nothing but real sense could be as funny as Dooley is. Mr. Dunne has come to be pretty nearly indispensable. Here's hoping for his early and complete recovery.'—Harper's Weekly.

THE TITLE OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY REVIEW

'THE NINETEENTH CENTURY AND AFTER.'

There has been a good deal of curiosity respecting the title which Mr. James Knowles would give to his celebrated Review after the nineteenth century.

There can be no doubt, we think, that it would have been a great mistake to have changed the main title which is so well known throughout the civilised world; the addition of the words 'and after' to the existing title was all that was necessary to show that the great Review will march with the times, if not in advance of them.

We are glad to be able to give a reproduction of the simple and admirable design on the title-page of the January number; it is also given in much smaller size on the front of the cover.

'This Janiform head, adapted from a Greek coin of Tenedos at the request of the Editor, by Sir Edward J. Poynter, P.R.A., tells, in a figure, all that need be said of the alteration made to-day in the title of the Review.'—(Editor's note on title-page of the number for January 1901.)

The following is a list of the articles in this number:

Frontispiece, by Sir Edward J. Poynter, P.R.A.; Midnight, December 31st, 1900, by Stephen Phillips; A New Century and an Old Riddle, by the Hon. Mrs. Chapman; England's Peasantry—Then and Now, by the Rev. Dr. Jessopp; The Admiralty and Submarine Boats, by Edmund Robertson, Q.C., M.P. (late Civil Lord of the Admiralty); On Spion Kop, by L. Oppenheim; Scientific Use of Hospitals, by Sir Michael Foster, K.C.B., M.P.; The Role of Women in Society, II., by the Hon. Lady Ponsonby; 'The Sources of Islam,' by the Moulvie Rafiuddin Ahmad; Hooliganism, by John Trevanthen (Farm School, Redhill); A Day of Purification, by Henry Jephson; The Nicaragua Canal Question, by Robert Bromley; Varying Ideals of Human Beauty, by the Hon. John Collier; Current Politics: (1) A Liberal View, by Sir Wemyss Reid; (2) A Conservative View, by Sidney Low; The Catholic Doctrine of Indulgences, by the Bishop of Newport; Note on the Papal Indulgence at Oberammergau, by the Editor; Lord Roberts on Army Reform (reprinted from Nineteenth Century, June 1884).

DOD'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE FOR 1901.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. have just published the new volume of 'Dod,' now in its sixty-first year, and although it numbers over eleven hundred pages it is as handy as ever as a work of reference. The following summary of contents clearly indicates the scope of this admirable work.

SUMMARY OF CONTENTS.

Introductory Matter.
Complete Essay on Precedence, with Tables.
Inferior Titles of Peers.
The Queen and Royal Family.
H.M.'s Officers of Arms, forty-one Illustrations of Badges, Orders, &c.

PART I.

The Peers, Peeresses, Bishops (English, Colonial, Suffragan, Missionary, Assistant, &c.), Privy Counsellors, Baronets, Judges, Lords of Sessions, Knights, Knights' Widows, &c.

PART II.

Sons, Daughters, &c. of Peers, with courtesy titles, and Second Marriages.
Modes of Addressing Persons of Title, and Explanation of Terms relating to Ranks.
Lists of the Privy Council and Orders of Knighthood. &c. &c.

As the Globe says: 'This work enables the reader to ascertain in a moment the status and career of every individual of high rank in the kingdom.'

By no means the least useful part of Dod is the section describing the correct way of addressing letters &c. to persons of title.

The 1901 edition contains, in addition to the unusually large number of creations, promotions, and appointments of the year, all the results of the General Election (Dod must be prophetic to do that quite), the successions, promotions, and appointments occasioned by the war services of the titled classes—British blue blood has been freely poured on South African battle-fields.

'WHITAKER' FOR 1901.

The American papers have been telling us of the citizens of some city of the great Republic—whose development is the greatest wonder of the past century—who invited contributions of any remarkable books &c. to be enclosed in an iron safe on New Year's day 1901, in which they are to be sealed up for a hundred years.

It is to be hoped that some Briton was present and popped in a copy of that epitome of the British Empire, 'Whitaker's Almanack'—even if it were a last year's issue. The Americans have nothing to show like it—in this respect at least British enterprise is still ahead.

The saddest feature of the new 'Whitaker' is the alphabetical list, 'the length of which must give pause to all,' of the commissioned officers and army nurses who have fallen in the South African war during the past year; but, as Captain Mahan says in his splendid tribute to our army and navy in his 'Story of the South African War,' these men have fallen 'not in vain.'

There are many new features in the new issue, which, it goes without saying, has been brought up to date as far as possible in every respect considering the size of the work and the immense edition printed.

The only omission of importance which we notice is that of the Publishers' Association, and we feel that the more keenly inasmuch as the Authors' Society is included.

'WHO'S WHO' FOR 1901.

This indispensable work is again enlarged, and now extends to over twelve hundred pages, 'Men and Women of the Time' having been incorporated with the present issue. The new biographies include all Companions of Orders not previously inserted, and an attempt has been made to record the relationships of persons whose biographical notices are given. This last new feature might in some quarters be taken as rather a nasty dig at the present Government.

Messrs. A. & C. Black are to be congratulated on the great success their standard work of reference has attained. Wherever you go—in the private study, in the merchant's office, in government departments, everywhere—you are certain to see 'Who's Who,' and if you do not see it you are pretty certain to hear someone calling out for it.

THE BOOK SALES OF 1900.

The following extract is from an article on 'The Book Sales of 1900' in the Athenæum of December 29:

The last year of the nineteenth century will be remembered by those who are interested in such matters as being, on the whole, one of the most unsatisfactory of our own time so far as the sale of books is concerned, although it is possible that the first year of the new century may prove to be worse. It is true that extremely scarce and consequently desirable and expensive volumes of a certain kind have brought the same large prices as heretofore, but they have been comparatively few in number, their owners having preferred to wait rather than run the risk of placing them on a falling market. The war is, of course, responsible for much in this matter, and it is worthy of note that during the whole of January not a single important collection was seen in any of the sale-rooms. That was a month of unsatisfactory excursions and frequent alarms—a very dismal period, when all sorts and conditions of men pored over the newspapers and gave books the cold shoulder, to their bane. It is possible, though not probable, that the war may also be responsible for the extraordinary backsliding of many books, pamphlets, and even leaflets which presumed to be fashionable in more peaceful days. What, for example, has happened to the 'Badminton Library of Sports and Pastimes' that 'Shooting' in such an excellent series should drop from £9. 10s. to £4, and almost every other book—'Hunting' not excepted—suffer in the same proportion? That the Davos-Platz brochures and several of Mr. Kipling's less important works should fall from the extremely high pinnacle on which they had been placed is a matter for no surprise, since they were curiosities and nothing more; but the 'Badminton Library' has earned for itself a position second to none, and was considered to be stable enough. When 'School-boy Lyrics' dropped from £135 to £90, and then to £40 odd, finally eclipsing itself by touching the bottom at £3. 5s., many people smiled and were glad, while one or two tried to explain the circumstance away by drawing distinctions between the copies sold, their condition, and so forth, not realising that it is just these distinctions that are the very life and being of the fanciful, not to say ridiculous, prices that are sometimes paid for trifles of absolutely no importance whatever.

TRADE CHANGES.

Messrs. Miller & Gill have commenced business at Cambridge Circus, Charing Cross Road, W.C., as discount and general booksellers and bookbinders. Mr. H. J. Miller was with Messrs. A. & F. Denny, of the Strand, for seventeen years.

Messrs. J. & A. Churchill write: 'Permit us to notify to you that we have this day taken into partnership our sons, Mr. A. William Churchill and Mr. J. Theodore Churchill. Associated with us in business for upwards of five years, they have fully qualified themselves to take a position of responsibility. The name of the firm will remain as at present.'

Mr. Edward Stanford, 26 Cockspur Street, having disposed of his premises to the London County Council, has removed his map publishing business and Government Agency to his house in Long Acre, and has sold his retail stock of books and stationery to Messrs. Hugh Rees, Limited, 124 Pall Mall. The valuation was made on behalf of both parties by Mr. Burghes.

SIR THOMAS CLARK, BART.

We regret to have to record the death of Sir Thomas Clark, Bart., head of the firm of T. & T. Clark, publishers, which took place on the 24th of December last at his residence, 11 Melville Crescent, Edinburgh. The funeral took place on Friday, December 28, and was the largest seen in Edinburgh for many years. It was attended officially by the magistrates and Town Council of the City, and many other public bodies.

The late Baronet was born Sept. 25, 1823. The founder of the business was his uncle, Mr. Thomas Clark, who commenced business in 1821 as a publisher, first in Parliament Square and then in George Street, where the business is still carried on. In 1846 his nephew, Mr. Thomas Clark, having completed his term of apprenticeship, and having afterwards spent a short time in the establishment of Messrs. Hamilton, Adams & Co., in London, where his presence is well remembered by the present writer, he was taken into partnership and the business assumed its present designation. Mr. Clark, senior, retired from active business to enjoy the pleasures of country life, and, while still taking a deep interest in the business, left the details principally to his nephew. He died in 1868, and since that time Mr. Thomas Clark was the sole partner till his two sons joined him.

In 1883 he was elected a magistrate, and two years later he was appointed Lord Provost. During his tenure of the office of Chief Magistrate his name was associated with much good civic work.

In 1886 Sir Thomas Clark retired from business in favour of his son Mr. John M. Clark (now Sir John M. Clark, Bart.), and in 1894 Mr. Thomas George Clark was received into partnership by his brother. Since that time the two brothers have been the sole partners of the firm.

It was on the occasion of the Queen's visit to the International Exhibition of 1886, when her Majesty resided at Holyrood, that Sir Thomas Clark received his baronetcy.

Besides his municipal work, Sir Thomas took an active part in other public institutions, and was associated with many social and philanthropic movements. He is succeeded in the title by his elder son, John Maurice, who was born in 1859 and who is now senior partner in the business. The firm since its commencement has occupied a unique place as publishers of theological literature.

Under the heading of 'PUBLISHERS OF TO-DAY,' June 13, 1891, a full account will be found of the house of T. & T. Clark, together with a portrait of the late Sir Thomas Clark, Bart., and also one of Mr. John Maurice Clark (now Sir John).

THE NET PRICE SYSTEM FOR BOOKS.

Literature, which month by month becomes more interesting and indispensable to the lover of books, in its issue for December 29 has a long article on 'Publishing in 1900,' which begins by the following reference to the 'net system':

From the trade point of view the principal event of the publishing year has been the introduction and consolidation of the improved net system—the most important work, as Mr. Murray has said, ever undertaken by the Publishers' Association. Whether the change will so improve the financial position of the booksellers as to encourage a better class of men (as we suggested last week) to undertake the work remains to be seen, but there is no doubt that the monster of underselling within the trade itself, which was rapidly tearing the heart out of it, has received a check. It is just a year since the plan came into operation, and the promoters wisely went to work gradually, laying a good foundation instead of striving to carry out any revolutionary measure. The result is that the number of books published at net prices is increasing every month, and it is an encouraging sign that the Associated Booksellers want more of them. The fears of those who anticipated opposition on the part of the public were groundless; the public appears to have accepted the change without a murmur.

Some of our friends in the book trade might be able to tell a different tale as regards the murmurs of the public, but doubtless the fact that for the last year or two the public has had to take its patent physis net has prepared it to swallow its literature in the same way.

DEATH OF AN AFRICAN EXPLORER.

MAJOR SERPA PINTO.

The death is announced of Major Serpa Pinto, the well-known African explorer, at the age of fifty-four.

Alexandre Alberto de la Roche de Serpa Pinto was born in Northern Portugal in 1846. His father shortly after emigrated to America, but he himself subsequently returned to Portugal, and after passing through the military school at Lisbon entered the army in 1863. He took part in the Zambesi Campaign of 1869, and displayed great gallantry at the Battle of Massangano, in command of the African native troops. He made several expeditions into the interior, and notably in 1877, when he started from Benguela to cross the Continent from West to East, and, after a most adventurous journey, reached the Zambesi, whence he made his way to Pretoria, arriving there in February 1879. On his return to Europe he was promoted to the rank of major, and Aide-de-camp to the King. He afterwards described this arduous journey in a well-known book, 'How I Crossed Africa' (Sampson Low, Marston & Co., 1881). The maps which he prepared, and the scientific observations which he took, at once established him in a high place among African explorers. In 1884 he made a further expedition to explore the regions between Mozambique and Lake Nyassa, but illness prevented the completion of his task. —St. James's Gazette.

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF BOOKS PUBLISHED IN 1900, IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

The books of 1898, the year of the Spanish-American War, were 410 fewer than those of 1897. The books of 1899, when our Boer War began, were about the same in number as those of 1898. All the year 1900 that war has worried us, and our book list shows a fall of 418. But the fall is not in every class of book. The numbers have increased in politics and commerce, including South African politics and commerce; in voyages and travels, including voyages to and travels in South Africa; in history and biography, including South African events, territories, races, and notabilities; in year books; in medicine and surgery, including malarial medicine and military surgery; in arts and sciences, including the science of war. On war in general, the number of works produced has been very large; on the South African War in particular more than a hundred books have been published during the last six months.

THE AMERICAN PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

We are glad to see from the New York Publishers' Weekly that the American Publishers' Association has secured promise of co-operation from practically all the leading publishers of the country, most of them having already become signatories to the 'constitution' of the Association. This 'constitution' is printed in full in the Publishers' Weekly for December 22, 1900, and occupies about nine columns of small type. There are fifteen rules, some of them divided into from four to seven sections. The President is Mr. Charles Scribner, and the Board of Directors for the first three years are: Charles Scribner, George Mifflin, George P. Brett, G. P. M. Harvey, General A. C. McClury, Craig Lippincott, Colonel Daniel Appleton, Frank H. Scott, and Frank H. Dodd.

We wish the newly formed Association every success.

AN ANNUAL CLOSE TIME FOR AUTHORS.

We hasten to remark that this excellent suggestion is made by Literature:

If publishers are busy about art, they are almost equally busy in a smaller way with one or two other subjects which mark the changing tastes of readers—and two such subjects are gardening and birds. But the taste for classics re-set seems to be subject to no changes of fashion; and if all the old books now being reprinted are read, there can be no time left for the new ones. Perhaps it would be well to have a year of jubilee when living authors should cease from troubling, or, at any rate, an annual close time of, say, a month, when nothing should be published but new editions of tried and valued friends, and the public taste could be periodically reinvigorated by draughts from the fountain head.

EXHIBITION OF MODERN ILLUSTRATION.

It has been found necessary to postpone the opening of the Exhibition of Modern Illustration in the Indian section (Imperial Institute Road) of the Victoria and Albert Museum, from Monday, January 7, until Monday, January 14. The private view will consequently take place on Saturday, January 12, instead of January 5, as previously announced.

The Exhibition will be open free every day: On Mondays, Tuesdays, and Saturdays from 10 A.M. to 10 P.M.; on Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays, from 10 A.M. till 4 P.M.; and on Sundays from 2 P.M. till dusk. The Exhibition will remain open about three months.

'A BROKER IN MANUSCRIPTS.'

The American Publishers' Weekly says: 'Paul R. Reynolds, a broker in manuscripts, has filed a suit in the Supreme Court against L. C. Page & Co., of Boston, to recover $675 for an alleged breach of a contract to purchase from him the American book rights to W. Clark Russell's story, "The Ship's Adventure." Although the amount involved in the suit is small, the case raises some novel questions of interest to authors and publishers. L. C. Page & Co., by their counsel, denied that they entered into any contract with the plaintiff, and asserted that it was their purpose to test the several legal questions presented by vigorously opposing the plaintiff's action.'

DEATH OF IGNATIUS DONNELLY.

Minneapolis, January 2.—The death is announced of Dr. Ignatius Donnelly, the propounder of the theory, which he endeavoured to prove by his famous cryptogram, that Shakespeare's plays were written by Lord Bacon.—Reuter.

THE OBLIGATION TO GIVE NEW BOOKS TO PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

The injustice of publishers being compelled to give to certain public libraries copies of every book they may publish, no matter how expensive the cost of production or limited the edition, has often been brought before the notice of the trade and the public in the columns of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR by Mr. Edward Marston and other competent authorities. That some day these long-continued efforts to obtain the removal of this trade grievance may result in the abrogation of this arbitrary clause of the Copyright Act is, we believe, not only a consummation devoutly to be wished, but a foregone conclusion.

Meanwhile it may be not uninteresting or unprofitable to look abroad and see what our Continental brethren think of this incubus, and how they propose to rid themselves of it. So we hasten to place before our readers the translation of a letter on the subject which Herr Siegfried Cronbach, of Berlin, has addressed to the recognised organ of the German book trade, the Leipzig Börsenblatt. It is contained in the issue of that journal for December 28, 1900, and is headed 'Abrogation of Obligatory Copies' (Abschaffung der Pflichtexemplare).

'It is a fact that the Social Democrats, the farmers' union (der Bund der Landwirte), the trade unions, &c. &c. have obtained and are still obtaining great results from legislative bodies by continued complaints and agitation. In view of these facts I should like to call upon the Börsenverein and the directors of the Chambers of Publishers and of the Publishers' and Booksellers' Unions (notwithstanding the failure which has hitherto attended their efforts), once more and again and again, by petitions to the Prussian Parliament (Landtag) and by newspaper articles to strive for the abolition of the great injustice done to us by our being obliged to deliver to the Royal Library and the university libraries the so-called duty-copies (Pflichtexemplare). What would the agriculturist say if a law obliged him to deliver a share of every harvest to the State, or the manufacturer if he were required to give one piece of his manufacture to the authorities? Such a request would be refused with indignation by those concerned and by the people at large. That we booksellers, who are just as heavily taxed as all other citizens, have been pleased to submit for so long to this extra tax is our own fault.

'I maintain that the major part of the people and members of Parliament have no conception of this extra tax, and that by persistent agitation we must and shall succeed in abrogating this injustice.

'It is not merely a question of the two copies, which we publishers must deliver gratis; but also that, because of this gratis supply hundreds of copies are not sold and therefore the bookseller is injured, for whoever can borrow our books gratis through the Royal Library and the university libraries has no need to buy them. If the State has millions and millions and to spare for the army, the navy, &c. it must have and has money for the purchase of productions of the mind.' By voice and pen—and, in short, by every imaginary means—we must strive to put an end to this evil, and I hope that this reminder to our bookselling authorities may not fall on stony ground.'

POPULAR NATURAL HISTORY LECTURES FOR CHILDREN.

We understand that Mr. R. Kearton, F.Z.S., will deliver a popular lecture on Wild Nature's Ways, showing birds, beasts, and insects living, loving, and labouring at home amidst their natural surroundings, to children at three o'clock on the afternoons of January 10 and 11 in Steinway Hall.

The lecture is to be illustrated by the finest series of limelight views (photographed direct from nature by Mr. Cherry Kearton) ever thrown upon a screen. They will be carefully selected from thousands of negatives that have been secured as the result of something like 20,000 miles of travelling in the British Isles alone.

The profits are to be devoted to the National Orthopædic Hospital for the Relief of Poor Crippled Children.

REVIEWS.

From Messrs. Angus & Robertson, Sydney (London Agents, The Australian Book Co., 38 West Smithfield, E.C.).—'On the Trail and over the Sliprails, a new volume of Australian bush life stories, by Henry Lawson. 'These sketches are literally alive with the life of the land which gave them birth.' This is what the Wellington (N.Z.) Evening Post says, and we should imagine the statement is perfectly true, as far as an Antipodean may judge of such things. Mr. Lawson is one of the best and strongest of short-story tellers we have ever come across. You would not go into the Australian bush to find refinement and culture, and in these wonderfully vivid pen pictures of the rough life you expect to find rough language. Here is a bit of bush slang which would be a godsend to a London bus driver now the roads are all 'up.' It was the driver of the Dead Camel coach, the passengers had been pestering him with questions until at last he 'asserted his manhood again and asked, in a tone calculated to risk a breach of the peace,

Any more questions, gentlemen—while the shop's open?'

The book is full of humorous or pathetic, or at least interesting vignettes of bush life. Perhaps the gem—for it is like a diamond set in mud—is the story of 'Two Larrikins.'

Here is a bit from 'The Mystery of Dave Regan.' Scene, a Bar in the Bush.

'Look her, Dave! Do you remember the day I met you after the storm?'

He scratched his head.

'Why, yes!' he says.

'Did you get under shelter that day?'

'Why, no!'

'Then how the blazes didn't yer get wet?'

Dave grinned; then he says:—

'Why, when I see the storm coming I took off my clothes and stuck 'em in a holler log till the rain was over.'

'Yes!' he says, after other coves had done laughin' but before I'd done thinkin'; 'I kept my clothes dry and got a good refreshin' shower-bath into the bargain.' Then he scratched the back of his neck with his little finger, and dropped his jaw, and thought a bit; then he rubbed the top of his head and his shoulder, reflective-like, and then he said:

'But I didn't reckon for them there blanky hailstones.'

From the Art and Book Company, 22 Pater-noster Row.—'My New Curate: a Story gathered from the Stray Leaves of an Old Diary,' by the Rev. P. A. Sheehan, P.P. Doneraile (Diocese of Cloyne), illustrated by Louis Meynell. This is a charming book, the recollections, one might almost call them the confessions, of an old Roman Catholic Irish parish priest, who is loved by his parishioners as was Father O'Flynn. Father Dan lays his whole soul bare in what he calls 'these mnemonic scraps from my diary.' With his favourite writer he says, 'There is nothing human that does not interest me. All the waywardness of humanity provokes a smile; there is no wickedness so great that I cannot pity; no folly that I cannot condone; patient to wait for the unravelling of the skein of life till the great Creator willeth, meanwhile looking at all things sub specie æternitatis, and ever finding food for humility in the barrenness of my own life.' Father Dan begins as a young man his work in a little remote Irish village near the sea. He has great schemes for improving the position of his flock. 'I remember,' he tells us, 'what magnificent ideas I had. I would build factories, I would pave the streets, I would establish a fishing station and make Kilronan the favourite bathing resort on the west coast; I would write books, and be all round a model of push, energy, and enterprise. And I did try. I might as well have tried to remove yonder mountain with a pitchfork, or stop the roll of the Atlantic with a rope of sand. Nothing on earth can cure the inertia of Ireland. It weighs down like the weeping clouds on the damp, heavy earth, and there's no lifting it, nor disburthening of the souls of men of this intolerable weight.' But Father Dan is only retrospectively pessimistic, and when a young curate comes to the parish full of zeal and earnestness he encourages him heartily. This bright, racy picture of Irish life has run through eight editions in America in less than a year, and should become as popular on this side of the Atlantic.

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—From Messrs. A. & C. Black we have received 'Waverley' and 'Guy Mannering,' being the two first volumes of their charming pocket edition of the 'Waverley Novels,' to be completed in twenty-five 16mo. volumes (6½ x 4¾), at the rate of two volumes a month. Some features of the edition: (1) legible type, set up at one of the most famous Edinburgh printing presses; (2) latest corrected text, with all the author's notes and introductions from careful collation with Scott's annotated press-copy, now in possession of the publishers; (3) a full glossary and index is appended to each volume, and a general index to the whole series in the last volume; (4) illustrations and binding; each volume contains a photogravure frontispiece from drawings by well-known artists. The title-page and binding design are by A. A. Turbayne. Should the demand for this edition of Scott's novels justify the venture—and we think they need have no fear on that score—it is the intention of the publishers to issue in a uniform style the 'Poetry' in two vols.; 'Tales of a Grandfather,' in two vols.; and the Narrative edition of Lockhart's 'Life of Scott,' in two vols. 'Horæ Subsecivæ,' by Dr. John Brown, of Edinburgh, author of 'Rab and his Friends,' has just been issued in three vols. in the same series.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'Villa Ruben,' by John Sinjohn. This is a light fanciful story, deftly interspersed with sketches of character that are certain to enchain the reader's interest. The delicate thread of a love affair winds its way throughout the volume, and upon this the rest of the events are jointed. Perhaps it is as well that some of the personages have their comical aspects, for the love passion of Alois Harz and Christian Treffry is a little pathetic and depressing from the very difficulties that beset it. However, all comes right at the conclusion, though with such an emotional imaginative disposition as Christian's it is doubtful whether there can ever be perfect contentment. Such a woman seems born to suffering. Old Nicholas Treffry was singularly just in his judgment of Alois. 'He's got pluck, he's strong, he's in earnest; but he's got a dam' bad temper, he's an egotist, and—he's not the man for you. If you marry him, Chris, as sure as I lie here, you'll go to the wall. You're not your father's child for nothing; clean Devonshire breed he was, soft as butter; my mother was a Devonshire woman, too; you're inbred to it, Chris, d'ye see, inbred to it, . . . you've enough of the Cornishman in you to make you as obstinate as the devil; but obstinacy ain't strength, Chris; an', look here! you'll give up everything to him, you'll be cruckying down to lick his shoes, and mind you this, you'll never play anything but second fiddle in his life. He'll always be first with himself, he an' his work, or whatever he calls p-painting p-pictures; an' some day you'll find it out, and you won't like it, and I don't like it, for you, Chris, and that's flat.' It looks uncommonly as if Chris had found it out when the curtain falls on the close of the story.

From Mr. Alexander Gardner, Publisher to Her Majesty the Queen, Paisley and London.—'Possibilities,' by Hugh Beveridge. In this little volume 'T. D. R.' has reprinted some of the verses and essays of the late Mr. Hugh Beveridge. The title indicates that the editor looks upon the collection as a proof of the promise of power, rather than of achievement, if death had not intervened. In an introductory letter we are told that Hugh Beveridge came to London 'to fight for opportunity, and did not altogether fail; yet had to come home ill after only a year's struggle, and never rose from his sickness.' The little book will be appreciated by friends of the author, though we cannot candidly say that we agree with the high estimate placed upon his essays by his friend 'T. D. R.,' who says: 'Whether the effeminate taste will relish them or not, they are surely strong and wholesome. I will even go the length of saying this—that they show that Beveridge had the gifts wanted for the faithful portrayal of that humble Scottish life which has been so offensively caricatured by outsiders, or by men who have written of it either with effusive and shallow sympathy, or in a love of superior smartness that makes their dreadfully comic sketches so acceptable to the London market'—which, to say the least of it, is not complimentary to that London market in which Mr. Beveridge hoped to find fame and fortune, or to those writers from Scotland who have done so.

From Mr. Wm. Heinemann.—'The Lady of Dreams,' by Una L. Silberrad. 'A novel of life in the poorer quarters of London, tracing the development and awakening to a larger life of a young girl who has never known of any existence beyond the dreariness of her sordid surroundings. The combination of reality, poetry, and dreamy impressionism is astonishing; every character lives. There are two intensely tragic scenes in the story, which, by its vivid realism, is brilliant and always convincing.' Whether every reader will agree with this description, which is printed on the paper wrapper of the book, we cannot say. The story is extremely well imagined and described, and we shall be glad to see other work from the same pen.

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett.—'A Suffolk Courtship,' by M. Betham-Edwards. Miss Betham-Edwards is always refined, always delicately analytical in her stories, and her present work possesses the charm which we have been led to associate with her reputation as a novelist. It is a tale of rural life some fifty years ago, and the characters, with few exceptions, bear the distinct hall-mark of country breeding. The authoress's quiet sense of humour subtly pervades the narrative. Mr. Abel Gooding, for instance, is a young farmer who is desirous, without knowing anything about it, of obtaining a Government appointment. Here are the two testimonials respectively given him by the rector and his landlord: 'Mr. Abel Gooding,' wrote his rector, 'is a good Conservative, a good Churchman, regularly coming to table once a quarter, and one of the most satisfactory churchwardens I ever had to do with in this parish. I can conscientiously recommend him as a candidate for the Civil Service.' 'My tenant, Mr. Abel Gooding,' testified his landlord—whom, by the way, he was in the habit of shaking hands with once a year at the rent-dinner—'My tenant, Mr. Abel Gooding, comes of an excellent stock, and has always given me entire satisfaction as an occupier of my best farm, keeps the land clean, doesn't spare for manure, and invariably has a good show of prime sheep and bullocks. I have no hesitation in recommending him for a responsible position in the Board of Trade or Inland Revenue.' As the title would partly indicate, the story is largely made up of love-making. This is of a very unsophisticated rural character, and is certain to provoke the reader to much amusement.

From the Northern Counties Printing and Publishing Co., Inverness.—'As the Wind Stirs, or Poems in Many Moods,' by Barnard George Hoare (London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co.). Scotland is peculiarly the land of poetry. Almost every town and district north of the Tweed has its own particular bard to sing its joys and sorrows, loves and festivals. Among the Scots singers who are already favourably known south of the border Mr. Hoare occupies a prominent place. His volume 'Joys of Home and other Poems' had distinct poetic merit, and the new volume will add to its reputation. In the beginning he strikes the minor note and keeps to it; that is to say, his muse is a domestic muse with a turn for the didactic, though Mr. Hoare is never guilty of preaching. There are pieces in his latest book which in their unforced pathos and sweet simplicity remind us of Whittier. In others we seem to detect the influence of Burns, a wholesome influence, surely, in the realm of poetry. But in the majority Mr. Hoare is simply and nobly himself. We commend his volume to all lovers of poetry.

From Messrs. Skeffington & Son.—'With Seven Generals in the Boer War,' a Personal Narrative by Major A. W. A. Pollock, one of the Times special correspondents in the Boer War. With illustrations, maps, and plans. The 'seven generals' being Gatacre, Clements, Roberts, Methuen, Mahon, Baden-Powell, and Hunter, it will be clear that Major Pollock's experience was by no means a limited one, and his book is certainly one of the most interesting, especially for military readers, of the many that have already appeared on the war. And by military readers these books will be in demand long after people at home have done with them; many thousands of our officers and men, when they return, will want to fight their battles over again in the pages of these chronicles of the great campaign. When printing their next edition of this book we hope Messrs. Skeffington will be able to add a good index, an absolutely essential feature in a work of this character and doubling its value as a work of reference. In his account of the Stormberg disaster Major Pollock blamed the 'responsible authorities' for not taking any compass bearings, 'and consequently no one knew where he was being taken in the dark. A knowledge of the general direction in which it was intended to proceed, and occasional references to the compass, would have sufficed to disclose the fact that the guide completely boxed the western half of the compass dial, concluding with a straight shot at the needle-axis, instead of keeping a line pointing a few degrees west of north.' When the Times published this statement the editor added a note to the effect that, owing to the abundance of magnetic ironstone all over South Africa, compass bearings are liable to be all over the place, especially at night. But Major Pollock does not accept this excuse. He says: 'This objection does not hold good. Compass errors occasioned by local influences are always so great, and moreover so variable, that with ordinary care it should be impossible to be deceived by them. To check a compass, it is only needful to take a bearing, advance straight to an intermediate point, and then take a second bearing. If the two agree the compass is unaffected, and may be relied upon. Be this as it may, I had a compass bearing upon the night in question and found it particularly useful.' We all remember with what dismay we read of that guide's blundering, and it will be interesting to see what Mr. Amery has to say on the Major's reply when he refers to the affair in his forthcoming second volume of the 'Times History of the War.' Major Pollock is not sparing of his criticisms on the work of some of our generals in South Africa, but it is well to remember, as Captain Mahan reminds us in his admirable 'Story of the War,' that what is called by some 'stupidity' is the very quality which has placed England in the forefront of the nations. The 'disasters' of a year or so ago saved South Africa for us. There are many anecdotes scattered through these entertaining pages. Here is one showing how a Dutch scout proved his loyalty. 'Amongst Goldsworthy's scouts was a Dutchman who was regarded with some suspicion. However, during the fighting this man cleared himself, and came to be recognised as a genuine "loyalist." A Boer galloped past, and the suspect by a brilliant shot killed the horse. After a short pause the man got up and began to run, when the scout took steady aim and fired. The Boer threw up his hands and fell in a heap stone dead. He (the scout) had effectually cleared his reputation.'

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'Domesticities, a Little Book of Household Impressions,' by E. V. Lucas. A companionable booklet concerning such matters as 'Toast,' 'Walks,' 'Tea,' 'Catalogues,' 'Clothes,' 'Fires,' 'The Miseries of Life,' &c.; just the book to have at one's bedside for a wakeful hour, or in a comfortable armchair after dinner. You can open it at random, and are sure to light on something worth reading. Here is a sample from the chapter 'Concerning Correspondence.' 'In Mrs. Trevelyan's "Glimpses of Welsh Life and Character" are two letters which display a decided directness. They tell a lovers' quarrel. The lady wrote first:

I do send you these few lines to say that this do leave me in good health; but I do not mean to walk out with you any more, because you did say as how I was as sweet as Flummery, and after that you did go and tell Elizabeth as how that she was sweeter than honey. Now, if so be I am only flummery, you can put on your best clothes and take to honey as soon as you like. I do mean to walk out with another chap next Sunday. He's honey and treacle put together. So no more from your late friend and future enemy.

M. R.

The gentleman replied:

This is to warn you that if you do walk out with Huney and Treacle next Sunday I will break your legs. So no more whatever from your determined well-wisher,

C. P.

We should like to quote from the essay on 'Catalogues,' but fear to shock the modesty of Miss Millard of Teddington; if she fails to include this charming little book in her catalogue, we shall think she is wanting in the 'snap and earnestness' attributed to her by a New York collector.

From the Unicorn Press, 7 Cecil Court, London, W.C.—'The Apartments of the House, their Arrangement, Furnishing, and Decoration,' by Joseph Crouch and Edmund Butler,

Architects. A well printed, well illustrated work, the object of which is to help to supply 'the demand of modern men and modern women for nobler and more beautiful surroundings in which to live their lives. Until quite lately the only way in which people of fine taste could make their environment tolerable was to gather round themselves movable works of art. . . . At last, however, it is beginning to be perceived that it is better to make the house beautiful in itself than to make it ugly and then set about hiding its defects by expensive pictures and hangings.' Certainly no one can walk through any English town without feeling that the beautiful buildings are either very old or very new—the work of eighteenth and nineteenth century architects of dwelling houses has not helped to make life worth living. The aim of the writers of this excellent work has been to build and decorate a house 'within the means of the man in the hansom'; rather a wide range of humanity! but the definition is simplified by the statement that 'the building contract should not exceed fifteen hundred pounds, while another five hundred, or two thousand in all, would furnish the place on the lines suggested in the book.' An interesting and well-written treatise. We do not suppose, of course, that all the decorations would please everybody, but they strike us as being much above the average of attempts of the kind to combine the beautiful and useful. A good index will doubtless be added in time for a second edition, it is the only furniture wanting to complete the work.

From Messrs. R. & T. Washbourne, Paternoster Row.—'The Page of James the Fifth of Scotland,' translated from the French by S. A. C., with the author's permission. The author's name is not mentioned. This little story relates in pleasant fashion the adventures of Francis, the son of Sieur Antoine d'Arcy de la Bastie, the most famous of the French gentlemen who accompanied the Regent Albany to Scotland during the minority of James the Fifth, and took part in the 'bloody struggles and intestine warfare' of that period. La Bastie, as a reward for his services, was appointed by the Regent Governor of the Eastern Border, an important post formerly filled by Lord Home, who had been executed by Albany. The position was at all times one of great difficulty, but for La Bastie its difficulties were increased tenfold owing to the ill-will of the Scottish nobles, who were much affronted at seeing an eminent 'post in the hands of a foreigner. The story opens with a spirited account of the result of the young hero's desire to catch a salmon in 'the little lake to the right of the morass of Dunse,' near the manor of Wedderburn. Sir Home of Wedderburn was at daggers drawn with La Bastie, and when his keeper catches the boy fishing he attempts to arrest him. The French lad—he is only about twelve years old at the time—uses some rather haughty language as the keeper approaches in his boat, and instead of waiting to be arrested leaps on board, seizes the Wedderburn vassal round the waist and jumps overboard with him, and leaves him floundering about while he swims to shore. There were two children in the boat with the keeper; one of them swims back to the Wedderburn shore, the other is in danger of drowning, the boat having been upset; so the young poacher plunges in again, saves the boy, secures his salmon, and runs off across the morass, followed by the keeper's dog, which he runs through with his dagger. Small wonder that 'the French youth was looked up to with a sort of hero-worship by the young Scots with whom he associated at Dunbar.' The adventures of 'The Page of James the Fifth' will certainly interest young readers, though they may 'hae their doots' as to their being 'all true.'

Scotland! Land of chief and song!
Oh, what charms to thee belong!

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

* In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch=2½ centimetres.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

IMPORTANT

ALL who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the

Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

ESTABLISHED 1837

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following :—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some HUNDREDS OF OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

THE HYMNAL COMPANION

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D., Lord Bishop of Exeter.

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S LIST

SMALL BOOKS BY GREAT GENERALS

1. THE RISE OF WELLINGTON. By EARL

ROBERTS, K.G. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. cloth, 3s. 6d.

The SPECTATOR says: 'A very interesting study of Wellington. . . Here a soldier, as sympathetic to his men as the Duke was unsympathetic, discusses with a soldier's eye and a soldier's plainness and frankness the main points of Wellington's career, and deplores, as we have done, the Duke's attacks upon the men who served under him. . . This attractive little book.'

2. CAVALRY IN THE WATERLOO

CAMPAIGN. By General Sir EVELYN WOOD, V.O. Crown 8vo. cloth, 3s. 6d.

The TIMES says: 'British writers on cavalry are few, and this admirable study by a practical soldier of Waterloo from the cavalry point of view is most welcome.'

3. NAPOLEON, THE DECLINE AND

FALL OF. By Field-Marshal Viscount WOLSELEY. Crown 8vo. cloth, 3s. 6d.

The ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE says: 'Originality of view, freshness of description, and skill in marshalling facts give special character to Lord Wolseley's essay, which should have its place in every military library. The volume is well illustrated by maps and portraits.'

SECOND EDITION IS NOW READY OF

CAPTAIN MAHAN'S STORY OF THE WAR IN AFRICA. By Captain A. T. MAHAN, U.S.N., Author of 'The Life of Nelson,' 'The Influence of Sea Power on History,' &c. In 1 vol. crown 8vo. cloth extra, with Map, 10s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

'The clearest exposition of the general outlines of the campaign that has yet appeared.'

'The sanest of the war books.'—LITERATURE. PALL MALL GAZETTE.

'Far and away the best military book on the war.'—LEEDS MERCURY.

'Perhaps nowhere does there exist in brief compass so well written a narrative of the campaign.'—ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.

'Will be appreciated by all military readers.'—BROAD ARROW.

CAPTAIN MAHAN'S

THE PROBLEM OF ASIA, and its Effect

upon International Policies. By Captain A. T. MAHAN, D.C.L., LL.D. With Map, 259 pp. post 8vo. 10s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

'Masterly and lucid . . . well deserves careful study.'—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

'It would, indeed, be a good thing if all who have any doubt of the justice of the war we are waging in South Africa were to read what this clear-sighted and impartial American has to say upon the subject.'—QUEEN.

'Sound and valuable, and contains less matter to be skipped than any book written of late about China and the Transvaal.'—ACADEMY.

TRAVEL AND ADVENTURE.

PINES. By FREDERIC H. SAWYER, Memb. Inst. C.E., Memb. Inst. N.A. [Ready.]

'Mr. Sawyer's book may be commended to all interested in the Eastern Archipelago, whether from the political or the natural point of view. . . It is full of the most curious information regarding the history, the resources, and the life and customs of the numerous races who inhabit the islands. A good map and an immense number of excellent photographs add greatly to the value of the work.'—GLASGOW HERALD.

SECOND EDITION, READY.

SAILING ALONE AROUND THE WORLD.

By Captain JOSHUA SLOCUM. Being a Personal Narrative of the Experiences of the Sloop Spray on her single-handed Voyage of 46,000 miles. With 63 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 8s. 6d. net.

'Should find millions of readers. A wonderful record of human pluck, endurance, and perseverance.'—CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL.

Demy 8vo. Illustrated. 10s. 6d. net.

LEPCHA LAND; or, Six Weeks in the Sikkim

Himalayas. By FLORENCE DONALDSON. With Photogravure Frontispiece, Map of Route, and 108 Illustrations. [Ready.]

'Much of the charm of those chapters dealing with the people who inhabit the northern reaches of India is due to a sharpness and freshness of observation which is often noticeable in books by lady travellers. Mrs. Donaldson has an exceptionally alert eye, and obviously an ardent and untiring enthusiasm for recording facts and impressions. It would have been impossible otherwise to fill a book of over two hundred pages with a narrative whose interest never flags.'—LIVERPOOL MERCURY.

ADDITION TO LOW'S LIBRARY OF TRAVEL AND ADVENTURE.

AT THE ANTIPODES: Travels in Australia,

New Zealand, Fiji Islands, the New Hebrides, New Caledonia, and South America. By G. VERSCHUUR. With Map and numerous Illustrations. New Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. [Ready.]

'EXCELLENT PATRIOTIC VERSE'

ACADEMY

By a Young English Girl

JUST PUBLISHED. Crown 8vo. cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

'Men of Men'

'Men of men were they, and their fathers were men of men before them.'

By C. FOX SMITH

Author of 'The Foremost Trail' and 'Songs of Greater Britain.'

GLOBE.

'A volume of verse of more than ordinary merit. . . To obvious sympathy and enthusiasm, they add a praiseworthy command of rhythm and unusual sense of form. As samples of vigorous rhetoric charged with real emotion, they can be unstintedly commended. . . Much is to be hoped for from a talent which, though still so young, can turn out work so terse and so sonorous as this.'

OUTLOOK.

'War verses, and above the average. This is the right note.'

ACADEMY.

'I think very highly of "Men of Men." . . Excellent patriotic verse.'

IRISH TIMES.

'The songs, in many measures and inspired by many themes, are bright and wholesome. . . The soldier songs are spirited, and they will give pleasure to many.'

MANCHESTER COURIER.

'Strength, well-regulated, but ever impressive, is the curiously dominant feature of this volume of poems. . . In "Per Mare, Per Terram" we have a fine series of impassioned appeals to the living, of rejoicings in the Empire's response, of regrets for the honoured dead. . . A volume opening with power closes with sweetness.'

CHURCHWOMAN.

'This author has a real gift of stirring verse. . . With a word of hearty welcome we commend this spirited work to our readers.'

SCOTSMAN.

'All are done with dash and, on occasion, dignity.'

FORTUNES IN WAITING FOR PAPER-MAKERS AND BINDERS.

'Why do publishers make some books so heavy?' This is a question which every reader of books must often be led to ask. You take up what looks like a bright and attractive volume as far as the binder's art can make it so—and the binder can do much to the making or marring of a book—and you find it as heavy as lead—almost. Of far too many books it can only be said that the heavier they are the better, the sooner will they sink into oblivion, but that is the author's fault. The paper-maker, the binder, and the publisher—especially the publisher, for the selection of material rests with him—can do a great deal to make a book handy and pleasant to handle instead of unwieldy and wrist-breaking.

One chief cause of the heaviness of modern illustrated books is of course the modern method of illustration—the half-tone process block, which, beautiful and useful as it is in many respects, has brought its own curse of monotony with it. Somebody has well said that it is fortunate there is little of the world left to explore, for the machine-made half-tone process block has robbed travellers' tales of all interest, they cannot lie now, and nothing is left to the imagination. The attempt to reach the North and South Poles ought to be forbidden by an international decree; to gain half-tone process blocks of the Poles will not add to the gaiety of nations.

Whatever its merits or its faults the half-tone illustration is the only general method of illustration we can boast of at this beginning of the twentieth century; if our descendants at the end of it have no better, Heaven help them! For, after all is said for it, there is a maddening monotony in the ever-increasing flood of process pictures poured out from the offices of the dailies and weeklies and monthlies, and from publishers generally—toujours process! And now it is coming in colour. The 'Three Colour Process' is booming, and soon will be as common as the three-card trick.

To properly print this photo-zinco turned-out-by-the-mile half-tone process block requires a paper of smooth surface, that is to say, a surface like glass—there is a fortune for the paper-maker who first gives us a 'feather-weight' paper with a surface like glass to print our process pictures on. At present this surface is obtained either by passing the paper between rollers—mangling it, in fact—or coating it with chalk; and whether it is mangled or starched it must be heavy, and has a gloss on it which is ruination to the eyesight when text is printed on it. And here comes in the mistake the publisher often makes—printing his text on the same paper as his process blocks. Of course, if an author insists on having illustrations in the text the publisher must print the whole book on heavy paper, but it is a good sign to find more and more illustrated books with the text on light paper with non-reflecting surface, and the illustrations printed separately on the paper their nature requires.

Then the binder,—is there not a fortune for the binder who can find some modern material which will take the place of the straw-board or mill-board used in the making of covers of books, something very much lighter and yet stiff and strong? It is perfectly certain that binders often make the mistake of putting just as heavy a board on a thick light book as on one as thick but twice as heavy, the Post Office being the only gainers.

Having disposed of two possible fortunes, we may as well add that there is another big one waiting for the inventor of a cheap and rapid method of fastening the sheets of the popular sixpenny and other periodicals together in such a way that the pages will open out flat—the present plan of sewing with wire makes it impossible to read these magazines with comfort. There is one subscriber to Scribner's Magazine who goes to the trouble of extracting the wire stitches with a champagne-opener; and he has his reward.

These may be Utopian yearnings, but they are justifiable now that the centuries have come of age. While they were in their teens the booksellers said nothing, but they have 'associated' like the publishers, and will begin to demand that light literature should be light in fact as well as fancy, since it is they who have to pay the carriage of it.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

We congratulate all concerned, including Messrs. Stoneham themselves, on the fact they have decided no longer to sell net books at a discount. As will be seen from the letter we publish from the Secretary of the Publishers' Association, the enterprising firm which has so long stood out has at last given way; the result will, we fully believe, prove a net gain to them as well as to the trade generally.

It is the Waterloo of the Net Book campaign. We, of course, do not believe with Literature that there is any need for a better class of bookseller; what is wanted is a better system of bookselling, and the net book system, which was started by the publishers and is now so generally adopted by the booksellers, if not itself the ideal system, will certainly show the way to it.

'A History of Chinese Literature,' the new volume of Mr. Heinemann's series of 'Short Histories of the Literatures of the World,' will be published on January 18. It is written by Professor H. A. Giles, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Chinese in the University of Cambridge, and late H.B.M. Consul at Ningpo, and is the first attempt made in any language, including Chinese, to produce a history of Chinese literature.

Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. announce for publication this month 'A Practical Guide to Garden Plants,' by John Weathers, F.R.H.S., with 163 diagrams; 'The Example of the Passion,' by B. W. Randolph, M.A.; 'The Book of Saints and Friendly Beasts,' by A. F. Brown, illustrated; 'In the Name of a Woman,' by A. W. Marchmont; 'Education and Life,' by J. H. Baker; 'Longmans' Complete Course of Needlework, Knitting, and Cutting,' by Miss T. M. James, with 444 illustrations; 'A Reading Book in Irish History,' by P. W. Joyce, LL.D.

Mr. George Allen has nearly ready for publication the 1901 edition of 'The Literary Year-Book.' Since it has been edited by Mr. Herbert Morrah this annual has gained wonderfully in interest and value. Among the contributors to the new issue will be Mr. Anthony Hope and Mr. Eden Phillpotts, and it will contain information and articles relating to such subjects as Agreements; Copyright; Dramatic Rights; Events of the Literary Year; Literature and the Law; Obituary (with Bibliography of Deceased Authors, by M. R. Hoste); Publishing of Books; Reviewing of Books; Literary Agents, &c. &c.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. announce a new book of sporting reminiscences, by 'Thormanby' (author of 'Kings of the Hunting Field' &c.), in two volumes, entitled, 'Kings of the Rod, the Rifle, and the Gun.' The work consists of biographies and anecdotes of the kings, and is illustrated with thirty-two portraits.

Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. are about to publish a military novel, entitled 'The Coming Waterloo,' by Captain Cairnes. The work consists of a remarkable exposition of the use of modern arms and appliances in warfare. The author describes in the most vivid manner an imaginary campaign against a Continental Power, and draws largely for his matter upon our recent experiences, teaching as they do lessons invaluable as to the altered conditions brought about by the introduction of modern arms of long range, the need for great mobility, and the many scientific improvements in the practice of war now accessible to soldiers. If Captain Mahan and Mr. Spenser Wilkinson are entitled to the premier position as experts on the theory of war, certainly no modern writer has more clearly represented the actual conditions of modern warfare than Captain Cairnes, who has made the subject his life's study. A sketch map of the scene of operations will be included in the volume.

'The Hoosiers,' by Meredith Nicholson, is a local history of Indiana State, its people, and its notable inhabitants; giving an account of the first settlement, tracing the beginnings of education, and describing episodes of interest such as the unsuccessful attempt to found the Socialist Settlement called 'New Harmony.' The origin of the name 'Hoosier' is discussed at length, but without arriving at a definite conclusion. The book is part of the series entitled 'National Studies in American Letters,' edited by G. E. Woodberry, and published by the Macmillan Co.

Her Majesty the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales have each been graciously pleased to accept a copy of 'Britain's Greatness Foretold,' published by Mr. John Hogg.

Messrs. Butterworth & Co. have just published 'The Yearly County Court Practice, 1901,' demy 8vo.

Messrs. Digby, Long & Co. have in preparation, and will publish early in the spring, cheaper editions of the following novels: 'The Desire of Men,' 'The Prince's Feathers,' 'The Loyal Hussar,' 'The Jolly Roger,' 'The Tuttlebury Troubles,' 'The Lost Laird.'

Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of Mr. H. F. Prevost Battersby's book entitled 'In the Web of a War,' which contains the only account of Lord Roberts's campaign by an eye-witness which has so far appeared; it is published by Messrs. Methuen & Co.

Mr. Fisher Unwin is publishing this week a unique war book by W. K. L. Dickson, entitled 'The Biograph in Battle.' It describes the author's actual experiences and hardships in the field. The author went out to biograph the war, and succeeded in obtaining many photographs from places where the camera can never have been known before. At times he was even in the firing line. Mr. Dickson accompanied General Buller's force to Ladysmith, and was present at Colenso; he subsequently joined Lord Roberts's force, and was able to biograph the hoisting of the British flag at Pretoria. The book is illustrated with 100 biograph photographs.

The Magazine of Art begins the New Century with an exceptionally fine number, including a frontispiece in colour of the picture, 'An Orphan of Amsterdam,' by Théophile Nicolet, and other specimens of the work of the great Swiss painter. The illustrated article by Mr. Austin Dobson on the newly acquired drawings by Hogarth at the British Museum will be welcomed by the great army of Hogarth collectors. But the gem of the number is the full-page photogravure of 'The Milkmaid,' after the painting by Greuze, recently acquired by the Louvre.

'WHERE ARE THE ADS. OF YESTERDAY?'

'The sands are all run out; no more
From dawn till eve, or low or high,
We meet the dear old ads. of yore,
Insistent, calling us to buy Encyclopædiæ Britannicæ, since simple 'tis to pay
Upon the Times' instalment plan . . .
Where are the ads. of yesterday?
Ring out the old! Ring in the new!
This is the message of the chimes—
That still may grow as erst they grew,
By methods hallowed by the Times,
Our libraries; for now we see
The first faint, timid offerings
Of 'Dict. of Nat. Biography'—
These are the ads. the New Year brings.

OUTLOOK.

Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. have spared no expense in the production of their six-penny series of the original stories, the new volume, 'Martin Hewitt, Investigator,' by Arthur Morrison—one of the ever-popular accounts of how crimes are detected—is sure to sell, if only by reason of its very telling cover, well executed in colours. For this class of book a startling cover is the best of advertisements, and Messrs. Ward & Lock know how to supply it.

Mr. Fisher Unwin announces a re-issue of Josiah Flynt's remarkable book, 'Tramping with Tramps.'

A new edition of 'The Business of Life' (a book for everyone, as the author describes it), by the Rev. E. J. Hardy, of 'How to be Happy though Married' fame, is being published by Mr. Fisher Unwin this week.

Dr. H. Marshall Ward, Professor of Botany at Cambridge, in his essays on 'Diseases in Plants,' published by Messrs. Macmillan, professes to meet the wants of practical cultivators who have not time to study the life history of the organic causes of the diseases, fungi, insects, and the rest. The book describes the symptoms of disease and the course of the malady in plants with only such reference to the agents causing it as are needed for clear comprehension of the treatment prescribed.

'Practical Organic Chemistry for Advanced Students,' by Dr. Julius Cohen, is an enlarged edition of the author's earlier work on the same subject, entirely rewritten, with the addition of introductory chapters on organic analysis and molecular weight determinations.

A manual for young mothers by Genevieve Tucker, M.D., entitled 'Mother, Baby, and Nursery,' which Mr. Fisher Unwin published some time since, is being issued by him this week in paper covers at 1s. A feature of the book is the decoration of its pages by numerous baby faces in all sorts and degrees of smiles and tears.

Notwithstanding the enormous edition prepared of the Century number of the New Penny Magazine, this issue is already out of print. This week's issue contains special articles on 'President Loubet at Work and Play,' 'The Only Woman Pavement Artist in the World,' &c.

Mr. S. Walkey, author of the recently published volume of stories entitled 'At Britain's Call,' is contributing to Chums a new serial entitled 'With Redskins on the War Path: a Yarn of Tomahawks, Fights, and Perils,' which is to appear in the forthcoming number, and Paul Hardy is illustrating it. The Boxer rebellion supplies the incident for a coloured plate which is to be given with the same number. The picture is entitled 'Hurrah for the Handy Man!'

Amateur as well as professional photographers should know of the existence of a daintily little monthly magazine of photographic information, the Photo Miniature, published by Messrs. Dawbarn & Ward, Limited. It is admirably got up and charmingly illustrated.

Messrs. Skeffington are about to publish immediately 'A Refutation, by XXX. and LIX., of the Unfounded Attacks on British Officers made in "An Absent-Minded War" by "An Army Staff Officer."'

The same publishers also announce a translation from the French of extracts from the diary of Madame Hoskier, who perished in the fire at the Bazar de la Charité, in Paris, in May 1897, under the general title of 'Thoughts, Memories, and Meditations.'

Professor F. G. Peabody, of Harvard, publishes with the Macmillan Co. a remarkable series of discourses entitled 'Jesus Christ and the Social Question.' The social question, as Professor Peabody sees it, arises from that conflict between economic progress and spiritual ideals which is the characteristic of our age. The modern ideal aims no longer at mitigating evils, but at a reconstruction of the social order. The family, private property, and the State are menaced by a crusade that preaches the virtues of Christianity, but is hostile to revealed religion.

We hear that Messrs. Greening & Co. are about to relinquish the publishing of the Free Lance, which they have conducted with such spirit and enterprise since its inception, finding it too seriously interferes with their rapidly growing book-publishing business.

The Brothers Dalziel are preparing a Record of their 'Fifty Years' Work' in connection with many of the most distinguished artists of the period 1840-1890. There will be selected examples of the work of the best men whose drawings came to them for reproduction, and autograph letters (some in facsimile) from Lord Leighton, P.R.A., Sir John Everett Millais, P.R.A., Dante G. Rossetti, Sir E. Burne-Jones, Madox Brown, John Ruskin, and many others.

All who are interested in 'Mosquitos and Malaria' should see the illustrated articles on this important subject in Dr. Harford-Battersby's very useful little quarterly journal, Climate, published by Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.

We have received from Mr. John L. Myers, hon. secretary of the Anthropological Institute, the first number of a new monthly entitled Man. It will include contributions to physical anthropology, ethnography, and psychology; the study of language, and the earlier stages of civilisation, industry, and art; and the history of social institutions, and of moral and religious ideas.

A book dealing with 'Roman Catholicism as a Factor in European Politics,' by Frederick C. Conybeare, is about to be published by Messrs. Skeffington.

'It is as illogical for a woman to be ashamed of her lower limbs and ankles as it is for her to be proud of a graceful bust and symmetrical figure, and to delight in displaying the creamy nakedness of her arms and shoulders when in full evening toilet. The most elementary knowledge of physiology suffices to prove that from the knee downwards the female form is lovelier, much more graceful, shapely and delicately moulded than are those same members, the legs, in the male. Art in its most rudimentary shape teaches the same lesson. Then why this false shamefacedness at the hint of discarding the trailing skirt?' No mere man will for a moment dispute the truth of this assertion, so we can only hope that the January number of the Humanitarian will have an immense circulation among the fair sex. They will find in it most conclusive arguments against 'The Trailing Skirt' by Mr. F. W. A. Fisher. 'Man grows, as higher grow his aims;' this, the motto of the magazine, is well 'lived up to' in the current number.

Messrs. Frederick W. Wilson & Co., of Glasgow, have in preparation a new work to be entitled 'Frisolous Glasgow,' by Mr. William Ernest Cameron. The book will depict in humorous vein the everyday lighter side of life in the 'sea-born' city, and will be illustrated by well-known artists.

We regret to learn that Mrs. Joseph Hatton, wife of the novelist and journalist, died rather suddenly at her residence in Marlborough Road, St. John's Wood, on Saturday afternoon, January 5. Mrs. Hatton, who was known in other days as a very clever amateur actress, appeared some years ago on the regular stage in several prominent parts, assuming for the occasion, says the Daily News, the stage name of Miss Louise Howard.

A meeting of the Society of Public Librarians was held at the Bishopsgate Institute on Wednesday evening, January 2, when Mr. F. E. Chennell, Willesden Green, read a paper entitled 'The Pleasures of Librarianship.'

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

No. 1.—JACOB TONSON, concluded.

Before the end of the century Tonson removed from Chancery Lane to Gray's Inn Gate, the shop previously occupied by his brother, who had died. Here he dropped the sign of 'The Judge's Head,' and adopted 'The Shakspeare's Head.' Charles Knight says: 'He was truly the first bookseller who threw open Shakspeare to a reading public. . . . In 1709 Tonson produced Rowe's edition in seven volumes octavo.

Jacob Tonson and his successors of the same name quite justified the sign of 'The Shakspeare's Head,' for the various editions edited by Rowe, Pope, Theobald, Warburton, Johnson, and Capell were all associated with the name of Tonson.

Jacob had no children, and seemingly never married; he took his nephew Jacob into partnership.

In the year 1700 Tonson was instrumental in founding the Kit-Kat Club, of which he became secretary. The meetings were first held at a mutton-pie shop in Shire Lane kept by Christopher Cat. In 1708 he built a room at Barn Elms, Barnes, for the use of the club. In a poem on the club, attributed to Sir Richard Blackmore, these lines occur:

One night in seven, at this convenient seat,
Indulgent Bocca Jacob did the muses treat.

This year (1708) he went to Holland to obtain paper and engravings for the fine edition of Cæsar's Commentaries which he published in royal folio, with eighty-seven plates, under the editorial care of Dr. Samuel Clark in 1712. Nichols describes this edition 'as perhaps the most magnificent work that has been issued by the English press.' The manufacture of paper in England at this period had become confined to the commonest sorts, chiefly used for packing, and the types used in the better English printing offices were imported from Holland. In 1705 he published 'Addison's Remarks on several Parts of Italy'; and in 1706 he became acquainted with 'young Pope' and proposed the publication of his 'Pastorals,' which ultimately appeared in the Miscellany in 1709, and Wycherley wrote to Pope, 'You will make "Jacob's Ladder" raise you to immortality.'

In 1712 he removed to 'The Shakspeare Head,' opposite Catherine Street, in the Strand. In 1711 Swift, Addison, and Steele met at young Tonson's, and from 1712 Tonson, in conjunction with Samuel Buckley, became the publisher of the Spectator. In 1712 Addison and Steele sold all their interest in one half of the copies of the first seven volumes of the Spectator to Tonson, junior, for £575, and all rights, and the other half to Buckley for a like sum. In October 1714 Buckley resigned his half share to Tonson, junior.

In a dialogue between Tonson and Congreve, published in 1714, in a small volume of poems by Rowe, there is a pleasant description of Tonson before he had grand associates:—

While, in your early days of reputation,
You for blue garters had not such a passion,
While yet you did not live, as now your trade is,
To drink with noble lords and toast their ladies,
Thou, Jacob Tonson, were, to my conceiving,
The cheerfullest, best, honest fellow living.

Tonson seems to have been fortunate, not only in his publishing ventures, but he was congratulated on his luck in South Sea stock; he made a large sum also in connection with Law's Mississippi Scheme. 'He has got £40,000; riches will make men forget their trade,' wrote Arbuthnot.

In 1720 he gave up business and bought an estate called 'The Hazells,' at Ledbury, in Herefordshire.

Jacob Tonson died in 1736, and is reported, according to Nichols, on his deathbed to have said: 'I wish I had the world to begin again, because then I should have died worth a hundred thousand pounds, whereas now I die worth only £80,000'—a very improbable story, for, in spite of Dryden's complaints, Tonson seems to have been a generous man for the times and to have fully earned his title of the 'Prince of Booksellers.'

Dunton, a contemporary publisher, says of Tonson: 'He is a very good judge of persons and authors; and, as there is nobody more completely qualified to give their opinion of another, so there is no one who does it with a more severe exactness or with less partiality, for, to do Mr. Tonson justice, he speaks his mind upon all occasions and will flatter nobody.'

Pope, writing of him to Lord Oxford, said that if he would come to see him he would show him a phenomenon worth seeing: 'Old Jacob Tonson, who is the perfect image and likeness of Bayle's Dictionary; so full of matter, secret history, and wit and spirit, at almost fourscore.'

The elder Tonson's death at Ledbury, April 2, 1736, was preceded by that of his nephew, November 25, 1735—who at his death was described as worth £100,000, whilst the uncle's estate is mentioned as £40,000.

According to Curwen, Tonson's only rival in business was Bernard Lintot, and he gives an amusing anecdote of competition between these two worthies for a work by Dr. Young. Both had made an offer for the work. The poet answered both letters the same morning, but unfortunately cross-directed them; in the one intended for Tonson he said that Lintot was so great a scoundrel that printing with him was out of the question, and in Lintot's that Tonson was an old rascal.

W. Roberts, whose account of the Tonsons is written in a kindly spirit, says of Jacob: 'Lingering for a moment or two over the character of old Jacob Tonson, we find it to be indubitably that of a thorough tradesman, not of a hero, but certainly of a generous, hearty, and good man, with a plentiful sprinkling of the worldly in his composition.'

The portrait of Tonson, which we were enabled to give last week by the courtesy of Messrs. Chatto & Windus, is after one of the portraits of him painted by Sir Godfrey Kneller—as a member of the Kit-Kat Club, of which club Sir Godfrey was also a member.

THE OLDEST OF THE REVIEWS.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR
AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me a few words to correct a misleading impression which has been inadvertently conveyed by an advertisement largely circulated during the last few days?

In announcing their January number the proprietors of the Fortnightly Review have stated that theirs 'is the oldest of the monthly reviews,' and is now entering upon 'its thirty-seventh year of issue.' In so saying they have manifestly, by some clerical error, overlooked the fact that the Westminster Review has just entered upon its seventy-eighth year, and is therefore rather more than twice as venerable as the Fortnightly.

As I have just taken over the publication of the Westminster, I trust you will pardon my drawing your attention to this fact.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

ST. DUNSTAN'S HOUSE EMPLOYEES' DINNER.

A capital company sat down to a well-served dinner at Stone's Hotel, Ludgate Hill, on Monday last, Mr. R. B. Marston presiding, supported by Mr. R. Bickersteth, Mr. G. Abney, Mr. T. Brown (of Shanghai), Mr. H. Francis Tod, and Mr. G. H. Howard, together with something like 30 members of the general staff. After the usual loyal and patriotic toasts, the chairman congratulated the staff upon the efficiency with which work had been carried on during the past year; he suggested the formation of a Swimming Club, and expressed the desire of the firm to encourage rifle-shooting amongst the younger members of the staff. A cordial message from the chairman of the Company, Mr. Edward Marston, who was unable to be present, was received with cheers. Mr. Tod, in a neat speech, proposed the toast of the evening: 'Success to the Firm of Sampson Low, Marston & Company, Limited.' He reminded those present that the firm had existed in three centuries, 1796 to 1901, and expressed the hope that it would last for three centuries more. The toast was received with musical honours. A lengthy programme was enjoyed during the evening, mainly owing to the efforts of Mr. Harry Cribb, who had charge of the arrangements, and who must be congratulated upon its success. Mr. John Probert, the St. Dunstan's House Glee Club (Messrs. Cribb, Barnard, Austin, and Taylor), Mr. Probert, jun., Mr. Tyrell, Mr. T. Brown, Mr. E. Barnard, Mr. E. Cross, Mr. Thompson, and many others, contributed efficiently to the enjoyment of the evening. The catering was excellent.

PUNCH'S ADVICE TO A YOUNG PUBLISHER.

Punch is uncommonly good this week; here is his advice to a young publisher:

'Since, my dear Jones, you are good enough to ask for my advice, need I say that your success in business will depend chiefly upon judicious advertisement? You are bringing out, I understand, a thrilling story of domestic life, entitled "Maria's Marriage." Already, I am glad to learn, you have caused a paragraph to appear in the literary journals contradicting "the widespread report that Mr. Kipling and the German Emperor have collaborated in the production of this novel, the appearance of which is awaited with such extraordinary interest." And you have induced a number of papers to give prominence to the fact that Mr. Penwiper dines daily off curry and clotted cream. So far, so good. Your next step will be to send out review-copies, together with ready-made laudatory criticisms; in order, as you will explain, to save the hardworked reviewers trouble. But, you will say, supposing this ingenious device to fail? Supposing "Maria's Marriage" to be universally "slated"? Well, even then you need not despair. With a little practice, you will learn the art of manufacturing an attractive advertisement column from the most unpromising material. Let me give you a brief example of the method:

I.—THE RAW MATERIAL.

"Mr. Penwiper's latest production, "Maria's Marriage," scarcely calls for serious notice. It seems hard to believe that even the most tolerant reader will contrive to study with attention a work of which every page contains glaring errors of taste. Humour, smartness, and interest are all conspicuously wanting."

The Thunderer.

"This book is undeniably third-rate—dull, badly written, incoherent; in fine, a dismal failure."—The Wigwam.

"—"Maria's Marriage" is another book that we have received in the course of the month."—The Parachute.

II.—THE RESULT.

"—"Maria's Marriage"! "Maria's Marriage"! "Gigantic Success—The Talk of London."

'The 29th edition will be issued this week if the sale of twenty-eight previous ones makes this necessary. Each edition is strictly limited!'

"—"Maria's Marriage"!'

"The voice of the press is simply unanimous. Read the following extracts—taken almost at random from the reviews of leading papers:

"Mr. Penwiper's latest production . . . calls for serious notice . . . the reader will . . . study with attention a work of which every page contains taste, humour, smartness, and interest."—The Thunderer.

"Undeniably . . . fine"!'

The Wigwam.

"The book . . . of the month."

The Parachute, &c., &c.

"—"Maria's Marriage"! A veritable Triumph! Order it from your Bookseller to-day!

'That, my dear Jones, is how the trick is done. I hope to give you some further hints on a future occasion.

MESSRS. F. & E. STONEHAM AGREE NOT TO UNDERSELL NET BOOKS.

AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—I am instructed to inform you that Messrs. F. & E. Stoneham, of Cheapside and elsewhere, have written to the Council of the Publishers' Association to say that they will not henceforth sell net books to the public at less than full prices, and undertaking to send a circular to their customers to this effect.

Under these circumstances the Council has much pleasure in announcing that the embargo on the supply of net books at trade prices to Messrs. Stoneham is now removed.

Yours faithfully,

WILLIAM POULTEN,

Secretary the Publishers' Association.

THE NET PRICE SYSTEM FOR BOOKS.

AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—Surely even the long-suffering bookseller must be getting rather tired and bored with the criticisms of the 'superior person' anent the shortcomings of members of the trade?

And is not the following sentence from Literature which you quote under the heading of 'The Net Price System for Books': 'Whether the change will so improve the financial position of the bookseller as to encourage a better class of men to undertake the work' &c. —rather priggish and savouring of humbug?

But, after all, there is yet hope for the benighted bookseller, and the standard of the trade will no doubt be greatly raised if only Literature will be good enough to follow in the footsteps of the Times and enter into the book-selling business itself.

Yours faithfully,

London: Jan. 5, 1901. W. J. BARWICK.

SIR,—Unless the 'net' system is adopted by publishers generally, and applied to all their publications, it will prove most inconvenient at home, a vexatious innovation to the provincial and colonial bookseller, and useless for the purpose intended.

Introduced with the object of stopping underselling in London, and to please a few authors who did not like to see their works ticketed at twenty-five per cent. discount, the interests and convenience of colonial, if not of provincial, booksellers appear not to have been considered by the advocates of this new system of pricing. As the result, the colonial bookseller—if not the provincial bookseller also—is obliged to catalogue or advertise net books at an advance upon the English publishers' price. As he, the colonial bookseller, cannot avoid—and does not wish to avoid—circulating publishers' catalogues and advertisements, his own announcements are a contradiction and an anomaly which cannot easily be explained when business is transacted through the post.

In the colonies twenty-five or thirty years ago it was necessary to add from 12½ to 25 per cent. to the English published prices; but since then the enormous increase in sales and a general increase in publishers' allowances have enabled most colonial booksellers to retail books at English published prices. The new 'net' system has to a considerable extent upset that most convenient arrangement.

The question of a uniform retailing price all over the world is, of course, impracticable unless publishers will make to provincial and colonial booksellers a sufficient allowance in discount, or pay carriage and other shipping expenses. That, however, would mean a deduction from the authors' receipts, and complicate the present methods of publishers' book-keeping.

The real and only question for consideration by publishers is whether the published price shall be the minimum or maximum—whether the London bookseller shall supply at published price, and provincial and colonial booksellers at an advance upon it. Without doubt, the older system is the better one for all concerned—the bookseller at home and abroad, the wholesale and export agents, the librarian and the publisher also—the author, I suppose, wishes chiefly for his works a wide circulation.

Two or three examples from many will show the working of the net system in the Colonies. A New Zealand bookseller receiving an order from a customer for a high-priced book, advertised £2. 10s. net, sent the order to London, neither party noticing the word 'net'—they would not at that time have understood its meaning if they had noticed it. The book was shipped, but on arrival out was charged at a higher price than agreed upon, and refused by the customer. It was then returned to London, and, under the circumstances, credited by the publisher at original invoice cost. The book arrived back not improved in appearance, the Colonial bookseller was mulet in costs of carriage out and back; the London agent had to write letters of explanation, and the matter extended over a period of twelve months.

Another Colonial bookseller having contracted to supply a public library with new books at a rate based on the 'published' price, the librarian insisted that he had nothing to do with London publishers' arrangements, and claimed and held net priced books on the usual terms. This Colonial bookseller then stopped the supply of net books to that library, until the librarian, trying to get them elsewhere, became more reasonable.

Inconvenience also arises from the fact that even the books of one author are priced under both the new and the old systems. This, of course, is unavoidable, but is not the less inconvenient. Of nine volumes of Sir Edwin Arnold's works, two are net; seven are retailed in London at 5s. 8d., and two at 7s. 6d. In the Colonies the retailing prices are 7s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. (or 9s.) respectively. Under the old method they would all be retailed in London at 5s. 8d.; in the Colonies at 7s. 6d. What more reasonable!

I noticed recently the publication of a popular magazine, priced 1s. net. Does the publisher know the trouble this gives to the newsagents, whose invoices are, as a rule, printed? This 1s. net magazine has to be written on invoices at the foot—whenever it is ordered and supplied—because it cannot be inserted with other 1s. magazines or sorted with them.

The book trade is not such a profitable one that it can be hampered by varying terms; and old rules and trade usages should not be altered without it can be shown that the trade as a whole will be benefited.

My argument is that it is better to have a published or advertised price fixed high enough to cover cost of delivery all over the world, and abatement or discount from that maximum price where it is possible, rather than a 'fixed' minimum published price, which has to be added to immediately after the book leaves London. A book-buyer abroad wants to know what a book will cost him; the new net price system does not tell him.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,
EDWARD A. PETHERICK.

TRADE CHANGE.

Messrs. Spottiswoode & Co. Ltd., of New-street Square, London, E.C., have taken over Mr. R. Ingalt, Drake's printing, publishing, and bookselling business at The Eton Press, Eton College, Windsor, and at 17 High Street, Eton, from January 1, 1901. They will continue all literary arrangements made by him at these addresses.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'Winchester,' by R. Townsend Warner, of New College, Oxford, late Scholar of Winchester College, with 46 illustrations, price 3s. 6d. net. This is one of the series of Messrs. Bell's 'Handbooks to the Great Public Schools.' It gives a most interesting short account of Winchester from four points of view—namely, its history, buildings, work, and life out of school. Mr. Warner devotes a few lines to fishing in the Itchen as one of the miscellaneous occupations of Wykehamists, and says, 'considerable execution has indeed been done on Itchen trout with a live minnow—it is magnificent, but it is not allowed.' It sounds as if Mr. W. knew more about it!—we do not know what Lord Northbrook and Sir Edward Grey would say, but they and many other old Wykehamists will appreciate this well illustrated and attractive little book.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co., Limited.—'The Sick and Wounded in South Africa, What I Saw and Said of Them and of the Army Medical System,' by Mr. Burdett-Coutts, M.P.

'The object of this' book, which is published before the issue of the Report of the Hospitals Commission, is to place on record in a complete form the case I have brought forward against the medical arrangements in the South African War, which led to the appointment of the Commission. It therefore contains everything I have said or written in public. Few people can have an adequate idea of the protracted and unequal struggle, in the House of Commons and the public Press, to obtain for the Enquiry into the facts and causes of the medical deficiencies in the war the fullest powers of searching investigation.'

As Mr. Burdett-Coutts's action in this matter has undoubtedly been both misunderstood and misrepresented, we welcome this full statement of his position—his critics should study it before they condemn him. One thing is certain, and that is that many an English soldier owes his life to the vigorous crusade on his behalf carried on by Mr. Burdett-Coutts. But apart from all questions of a controversial nature, this little work deserves careful study by all who are interested in army medical reform. Chapter XII. contains the author's very carefully thought out suggestions for improvement in the organisation, personnel, and work of the Army Medical Service in war time.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.

'Under Arms,' by Charles Doughty. (Small quarto, 1s. 6d. net.) From a note we learn that 'The profits of this edition will be given to the Soldiers' Widows and Orphans Fund,' consequently it is pious to hope this little volume of patriotic verse will have a much wider sale than it is likely to obtain on its merits. Mr. Doughty may claim to have a war-song style of his own, but somehow, like a jammed Maxim, it doesn't go off properly, e.g. :—

'A din tremendous of the cannon's throat!
Shrieks rend the aery skies of the great shot!
Shells' iron hurricane, that bursts hideous
'Midst the army! Hiss aloft of infinite lead,

Where flies a deadly sleet. Now on every hand,
Wounds red to blood, men stricken with-out life,
Our comrades fall. And yet our foes we see not
Are hidden in covert holes under the ground.'

From Messrs. Gale & Polden, Ltd., Aldershot. 'Skirmishing made easy: What to do and How to do it; with questions and answers,' by Major B. Witherby. (6d. net.) The South African campaign has shown us the enormous value of good skirmishing and scouting as practised by the Boers; and the object of this little pocket manual is to 'offer all ranks a system in which both the body and the mind are trained.' We asked a Dulwich College cadet to tell us what he thought of it, and his report was that it was 'not half bad,' in fact that it teaches 'How to do' what they do, which is encouraging; but, then, Dulwich won the Ashburton Challenge Shield last year. Here is the summing up, so to speak, of this very simple and clear little guide.

MAXIMS TO BE BORNE IN MIND BY THE SKIRMISHER.

Sight your rifle always carefully.
Keep your eyes open and your mouth shut, but your Information must be trustworthy.
Repeat all signals &c. quietly.
Musketry—Remember all you have been taught in fire discipline.
I nvariably take advantage of all cover.
See without being seen.
H oax your enemy.
E xplore every copse, hollow, and building.
R emember that on you, your own life, your comrades, and the good name of your regiment depend.

From Mr. L. Upcott Gill.—'Bridge Whist: its Whys and Wherefores—a progressive and clear method of explanation and illustration of the game, and how to play it successfully,' by C. J. Melrose, author of 'Scientific Whist.' With 'illustrative hands,' printed in colours, crown 8vo., pp. 224, (Price 3s. 6d.) Booksellers who have customers who play whist should make a point of informing them of the publication of this excellent work on the popular modern modification of the game. 'Bridge' is of too recent construction, so to speak, for its 'laws' to be well settled. As Mr. Melrose says: 'If your partner finds fault with your play at whist, you can always effectually silence him by throwing "Cavendish" at his head. "You knew I had no diamonds; why did you not give me a ruff?" says your partner. "Because I was weak in trumps myself," you reply. Your partner is only half convinced; he thinks (or rather, he feels) that by some intuition you ought to have divined that he was weak in trumps also, and wanted a ruff; but knowing that you are quoting good "Cavendish" he dare not question it. But the "Cavendish" of "Bridge" is yet to come. . . . It is in this modest spirit that Mr. Melrose submits his code of laws for the consideration and approval of Bridge players; he does not pretend that he has said the last word on the subject, and will be satisfied if his book leads to the drafting of a more perfect and authoritative code. Coloured diagrams of 'hands' and an excellent index add greatly to the value of the work, which will be welcomed by all lovers of the game.

From Messrs. Gowans & Gray, Glasgow.—Vol. II. of 'The Complete Works of John Keats, including his Letters,' edited by H. Buxton Forman. This very handy little volume is the second of the five which will form this latest and most complete edition of Keats. We congratulate the publishers on the manner in which they are carrying out their scheme of 'The Complete Library,' to contain the entire works of standard authors, to be issued in monthly volumes at 1s. net. It is a bold attempt 'to combine the excellencies of the best library editions with the cheapness of ordinary reprints.' The special features of these editions will be the care which will be taken with the texts; all different readings, without exception, will be given.

From Messrs. Greening & Co.—'A Vagabond in Asia,' by Edmund Candler, with a map of the author's route, and several illustrations from original photographs. A brightly written account of the rapidly gathered impressions de voyage of one possessed of 'the spirit of Vagabondage.' Driven by the monotony of work in an Indian hill station to seek relief in change of scene, Mr. Candler devoted a three months' furlough to a thousand-mile journey through Burma, Siam, Cambodia, and Cochin China. This part of his book he calls 'Off the Beaten Track'; the rest of it relates to sketches of travel in the Himalayas, in Arabia, and in the Southern Shan States, sketches which he tells us 'are for the most part merely the expressions of moods inspired by new environment. In voyaging, the author has had no other purpose than to indulge the nomad's instinct of restlessness. He does not pretend to speak authoritatively on matters Oriental.' He met with no particular adventures; but his bright and lively pen-pictures of Eastern scenes and peoples, supplemented by some excellent photographs, make a very attractive volume.

From Eneas Mackay, Stirling.—'Henley on Burns; or, The Critic Censured; being a Collection of Papers replying to an offensive critique on the Life, Genius, and Achievements of the Scottish Poet.' Collected and edited by John D. Ross, LL.D., editor of 'The Burns Almanack' &c. This is a collection of articles and essays in defence of Burns against what the writers consider Mr. Henley's attacks on the poet of Scotland. Some of the writers have an extraordinary way of defending their countryman! One of them says, p. 32: 'But it is a mean slander to brand the Scots peasantry as lewd, grimy, ribald livers. After investigation, we challenge Mr. Henley et hoc genus omne, to disprove the fact here stated that the record of crime, immorality, loose living, in every parish wherein Burns resided shows less by one-half—by 50 to 70 per cent.—in that epoch, than it does in the same parishes to-day.' The italics are ours. Great Scott! If an Englishman had used sic an argument as this! Mr. Henley is lashed for calling the Scots peasantry of a hundred years ago lewd, and his critic rebuts this slander by calling all the world to witness that the Scots peasantry of to-day are from 50 to 70 per cent. lewder! One begins to wonder where the unco' quid come in at all. We should have imagined that no Scotsman would have cared the prick of a thistle for any adverse criticism on Robert Burns.

'The design of W. E. Henley is to belittle Burns, not as a poet—that is beyond his power—but as a man. Our shilling critic puts the inspired peasant on a dissecting table, and goes over him bone by bone, rib by rib, exposing all his faults, and revelling in his shortcomings. Why should Carlyle's inner life have been held up to the world by Froude, and Burns by Henley? Is it because they were divinely-gifted Scotsmen? Why should the sacrificers always hail from the South?'

But while Scotland produces such men as Burns and Carlyle, why need she fear any 'attacks' on them.

From Mr. Norman Macleod, George IV. Bridge, Edinburgh.—'Macdonald Bards from Medieval Times,' by Keith Norman Macdonald, M.D. Dr. Macdonald has done all students of the language and literature of the Highlands a distinct service by re-issuing, in book form, the admirable series of articles which he contributed to the Oban Times. Though the papers primarily concern the great Clan Donald, they are of interest to all Highlanders and readers of Celtic literature. Not only does the author give a clear and comprehensive history of Gaelic poetry as influenced and produced by Macdonald bards, but, what is of yet deeper interest, if not of higher value, furnishes succinct biographies of the sweet singers laid under contribution, with copious extracts from their works. The bardic order, as Dr. Macdonald reminds us, had originally a priestly character, and until late times was held in reverence by the Scottish Gael. The note in Celtic song, even more than in Celtic story, is the note of sadness. Many of the pieces given in this volume are infinitely pathetic. At the same time, there is not wanting the lilt of gaiety. In every instance both the poetry and the humanity ring true. The biographical sketches are not only extremely interesting but are written with much skill, and to many people will be almost as fascinating as the poems they so happily illustrate. The poems, it should be added, are partly in English and partly in Gaelic.

From Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., Ltd.—'Harvest Tide,' by Sir Lewis Morris, Knt., M.A. This is a little volume of miscellaneous verse in a minor key. Sir Lewis writes graceful and often tuneful English; in one of his poems he tells us that he has no desire for fame as a writer of 'obscure inarticulate lines' or teacher of 'gutter-speech,' as he has much too deep a reverence for the sweet roses of our English tongue. One of the best of his patriotic pieces is 'The Union of Hearts,' in which he traces first the destruction of Spain's sea power by the English and its re-destruction by men of our race,

'Born late in Time, the Empire of the Free,

Lording the West, co-heiress of the Sea.'

In fancy the poet sees in America

'A might which joined with England's shall increase

The happier doom of Man, the victories of Peace.'

The rhyme gets the benefit of the doubt for the sake of the sentiment. But why should we not fight America again?—we have fought her more in a hundred years than we have many other nations in a thousand, and may have to do it again.

Here are specimens of the verse in which Sir Lewis's muse shines best, they are from the poem entitled

IN PRAISE OF NIGHT.

'No breath of morning wakes
The languid dreaming night;
Nor through the thick leaves breaks
A gleam of light.

'Then sudden, thro' the trees,
Listening, unstirred around,
Flutters a fairy breeze
With whispering sound.

'And straightway from the throat
Of some half-waking bird,
One hesitating note:
Dawn's earliest word.'

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'Military Dialogues on Active Service,' by Lieut.-Colonel N. Newnham-Davis. This is a capital little book, which is certain to be popular with Tommy Atkins and his admirers. Unfortunately Tommy is still absent, and Messrs. Sands will have to wait a bit to catch him—he is still after De Wet. In his preface the author says: 'Active service is not all fighting. There are thirty days of marching and watching and waiting—cheerfully gone through—for every day of actual contact with the enemy. I have attempted in these dialogues to give glimpses of the waiting and the watching, as well as of the fighting.' We think Col. Newnham Davis has hit on a very happy idea, and carried it out well too. These dialogues paint the ups and downs and humours and trials of the soldier's life better than any pictures could do. The cover design is excellent, and as the price of the book is only 3s. 6d. it ought to have a large sale—it has the field to itself.

From Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co., Limited.—'The Language of Handwriting: a Text-book of Graphology,' by R. D. Stocker, author of 'The Human Face as Expressive of Character and Disposition.' (3s. 6d. net.) Mr. Stocker prefaces his decidedly interesting treatise on the language of handwriting with a quotation from Lavater, which might have been very useful to Mr. Chamberlain in studying ex-President Kruger's character. Lavater says that an oblique and irregular handwriting indicates a sly, false, and crafty nature. Anyone who sees the cheaper kinds of widely circulated papers and magazines will not be surprised to hear that, according to Mr. Stocker, graphology 'has become wonderfully popular.' Whether they will be inclined to add with him 'and deservedly so' is doubtful. That many thousands of people should be ready to spend money in having their characters told from their handwriting is not a very hopeful sign. Here are a few examples of generalities of 'Graphology':

'Light fine writing shows a delicate mind, as well as æsthetic tastes, elevation of thought, and purity of feeling, as a rule, and feebleness rather than strength or vigour of organisation; though sometimes, to be sure, a morbid, unhealthy nature, and moral, as well as physical, weakness.

'Thick, muddy, hairy-looking writing, especially if the down strokes are not clearly cut and their edges are not sharply defined, shows sensuality, in some form or other.

'Handwriting that is of a medium thickness throughout, upon the whole, gives the most favourable indications; for then the writer will possess moderately intense passions.'

Flourishes have an illustrated chapter to themselves:

'All flourishes denote some degree of egotistical feeling—a desire for being praised, &c.; an elaborate flourish indicates vanity.'

'When words are frequently underlined it indicates (among other things) poor judgment.'

The work is fully illustrated with specimens of writing and with signatures of well-known people, and although unquestionably a good deal may be learned from handwriting, its value as a test of moral qualities, good or bad, must be of the flimsiest nature.

From the same.—'Dictionary of French and Italian Quotations, with English Translations,' by T. B. Harbottle and Colonel P. H. Dalbiac. (Price 7s. 6d.) This is the third volume in the series of 'Dictionaries of Quotations'; the first 'English' (already in a third edition), the second 'Classical,' the third is the one before us, and No. 4, from German, Spanish, and other sources, is in preparation—let us hope that the other sources will include Scandinavian. French and Italian literature offers of course an immense field from which to quote wise saws and pithy sentences. Not everybody knows, for instance, that Tom Brown's oft-quoted verse :

'I do not love thee, Doctor Fell,
The reason why I cannot tell;
But this alone I know full well,
I do not love thee, Doctor Fell,' is but a paraphrase of the following verse from Bussy Rabutin's 'Histoire Amoureuse des Gaules' published in a previous century :

'Je ne vous aime point, Hylas,
Je n'en saurais dire la cause :
Je sais seulement une chose ;
C'est que je ne vous aime pas.'

Everybody supposes that Dr. Johnson is responsible for the well-known libellous definition of angling—viz. 'a fish at one end of a rod and a fool at the other' ; but, as a matter of fact, Johnson never said anything of the kind, it was a scurrilous Frenchman in the seventeenth century, and we had hoped to find his lines again in this work, but have failed to do so. Johnson was a great admirer of Walton, and intended to have written his life ; he urged Moses Browne to publish an edition of the 'Angler,' which he said was 'a mighty pretty book.' There are some thousands of admirably selected quotations in this handsome volume ; then comes an Index of Authors, with the date of birth and death—a very happy and useful addition ; and in the last hundred pages we have an Index of Subjects in French, Italian, and English, with references to the pages where the subject is referred to.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

THE HYMNAL COMPANION

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. Bishop E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D. (late of Exeter)

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

NEW BOOKS AND NEW EDITIONS From Mr. Murray's Educational List

NEW EDITIONS. READY IN JANUARY

THE STUDENT'S HISTORY OF ROME.

FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE EMPIRE. With Chronological Tables and Chapters on the History of Literature and Art. By H. G. LIDDELL, D.D., sometime Dean of Christ Church, Oxford. Revised, and in part Re-written, by P. V. M. BENECKE, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. With Coloured and other Maps and numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

THE STUDENT'S GIBBON.

Abridged from the Original Work by Sir Wm. Smith, D.C.L., LL.D. A New and Revised Edition in Two Parts.

PART II.—Nearly ready. By J. G. C. ANDERSON, M.A., Fellow of Lincoln College, and Lecturer at Christ Church, Oxford. With Maps and Illustrations.

PART I.—Published. From the Accession of Commodus to the Death of Justinian. By A. H. J. GREENIDGE, M.A., Lecturer and late Fellow of Hertford College, Lecturer in Ancient History at Brasenose College, Oxford.

Crown 8vo. 5s. each Volume.

LITTLE ARTHUR'S HISTORY OF GREECE.

A Companion Volume to 'Little Arthur's England' and 'Little Arthur's France.' By the Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. With Maps and Illustrations. 12mo. 2s. 6d. [Ready shortly.]

THE GROWTH OF GREATER BRITAIN.

A Reader for Schools. Compiled and Edited by ELIZABETH LEE, Author of 'A School History of English Literature' &c.; Editor of 'Cowper's Task and Minor Poems' &c. Price 2s. [Ready shortly.]

This School Reader is conceived on novel lines. The extracts are arranged in sections, comprising 'The English Colonies up to 1800,' 'Australia,' 'India,' 'South Africa,' &c.; and the story of these periods of British history is told by the actual explorers, navigators, colonists, and statesmen who were instrumental in the expansion of England at the time. The selections range from the works of Sir Walter Raleigh to the speeches of Lord Beaconsfield, and include yet more modern authorities. There will be a literary introduction, weaving the threads together, and the extracts will be supplied with biographical and historical notes. The name of the author, who is a contributor to the 'Dictionary of National Biography,' carries assurance that the editorial work will be well done.

NEW EDITION. JUST PUBLISHED.

ENGLISH COLONIZATION AND EMPIRE.

By A. CALDECOTT, M.A. Camb. and Lond., Fellow and Dean of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Professor of Philosophy, King's College, London. With Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. With a New Chapter, bringing the Work entirely up-to-date, by F. A. KIRKPATRICK, M.A.

THE GREEK THINKERS.

By Professor THOREDOR GOMPERZ, of Vienna University, Hon. LL.D. Dublin, Ph.D. Königsberg, &c. Translated by LAURIE MAGNUS, M.A., Magdalen College, Oxford. Demy 8vo. 14s. net.

VOLUME I.—The Geography of Greece—National Greek Characteristics—The Art of Writing—Colonies—Commerce—Society—Religion—Anthropomorphism—Homer—Hesiod—Ionian Nature Philosophy—Thales—Anaximander—Anaximenes—Heraclitus—The Orphics and Orphic Cosmogony—Pherecydes—Pythagoras and his Disciples—Xenophanes—Parmenides—Anaxagoras—Empedocles—The Historians—Hecataeus—Herodotus as Monotheist, Critic, and Positivist—The Age of Enlightenment and Emancipation—The Physicians—Atomism—Mental and Moral Sciences—Sophists—Protagoras—Gorgias—The Advance of Historical Science.

[Ready in January.]

VOLUME II., containing Plato, is now nearly completed, and is already in course of translation. This account of Greek Philosophy by the author of the standard German translation of J. S. Mill's 'Logic' is inspired by the endeavour to do justice to the chief tendencies in all departments of ancient thought. Composed throughout in a clear and popular style, the work will be found to combine in a singular degree the resources of an almost encyclopaedic learning with an appreciation of the results of modern science and of the dependence of the civilisation of the present on that of past ages. 'The Greek Thinkers' in this sense include the leaders of religion, of literature, and of the special sciences.

JUST PUBLISHED.

'No such comprehensive work has hitherto been issued, and, in our opinion, "The Public School Speaker" has leaped at a single bound into the very foremost rank, and has become the basis of its kind.'—BOOKSELLER.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL SPEAKER.

Compiled by F. WARRE CORNISH, M.A., Vice-Provost of Eton College. Large 8vo. 7s. 6d.

This work, as its name implies, is a collection of pieces suitable for recitation at school 'speeches.' The Editor has made his selection in the widest manner and from various languages—Greek, Latin, English, German, French, and Italian. He has included drama, general poetry, orations, and other prose pieces, ancient and modern, and is in hopes that no serious omissions can be found, unless it be those intentional ones from classics that are at every one's command, which he has left out to make room for others more difficult of access.

It will be noticed that he has in many cases given an extract longer than is sufficient for a single recitation—he has done this advisedly with a view to affording greater scope for individual requirements and individual taste.

A complete Illustrated Catalogue of Standard Educational Works published by Mr. Murray may be had, post free, on application. This Catalogue includes Sir William Smith's famous Series of Student's Manuals, smaller Manuals, Dictionaries, Principias, &c.

SMITH, ELDER & Co.'s List

STUDENTS' EDITION OF SIDNEY LEE'S 'LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE.'

Just Published.

With a Photogravure Plate and 4 Full-page Illustrations. Cr. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Shakespeare's Life and Work:

Being an Abridgment Chiefly for the Use of Students of 'A Life of William Shakespeare.' By SIDNEY LEE, Editor of 'The Dictionary of National Biography'; Honorary Doctor of Letters in the Victoria University.

* * Also the FOURTH ORDINARY EDITION of 'A LIFE OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE,' with two Portraits of Shakespeare, a Portrait of the Earl of Southampton, and Facsimiles of Shakespeare's known Signatures, crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.; and the ILLUSTRATED LIBRARY EDITION, in 1 vol. medium 8vo. profusely illustrated with Photogravures, Topographical Views, &c. 16s.

STANDARD.—'Mr. Sidney Lee has done a service to all students of the most splendid period of our literature by preparing a condensed edition of his "Life of Shakespeare."'

DAILY NEWS.—'Mr. Lee's little volume can be most confidently recommended not only to students, but to all who wish to have at hand a thoroughly trustworthy work of reference.'

BRITISH WEEKLY.—'No abridgement was ever better managed than this. . . Nothing important even in the notes is omitted. . . Was ever so valuable a reissue published at so small a price as this?'

PLOUT.—'Mr. Sidney Lee's "Life of Shakespeare" has superseded all former biographies and anticipated all that are to come. It has now been brought within the reach of those whom scanty leisure or scanty purses indisposed to the purchase of the larger.'

INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF THE RENAISSANCE. By Mrs. LILIAN F. FIELD. Crown 8vo. 6s.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—'A thoroughly creditable piece of work, sufficiently concise for educational purpose, and likely at the same time to be acceptable to a reader of literary taste.'

DR. FITCHETT'S IMPORTANT PATRIOTIC WORK.

HOW ENGLAND SAVED EUROPE: the Story of the Great War (1793-1815). In 4 vols., crown 8vo. with Portraits, Facsimiles, and Plans. 6s. each.

PUNCH.—'Opportunistly at a time when the country is at a fever heat of warlike patriotism, Smith, Elder bring out the story of the great war that ravaged the Continent between the years 1793 and 1815. . . Mr. Fitchett handles a glowing pen, and illumines as with torchlight the field on which opened Pitt's long struggle with Napoleon.'

GLOBE.—'Mr. Fitchett has a complete grasp of his subject. . . His book should find a place certainly in every library, civil and military.'

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

FIGHTS FOR THE FLAG. Second Edition. With 16 Portraits, 13 Plans, and a Facsimile Letter of the Duke of Marlborough. Crown 8vo. 6s.

REVIEW OF REVIEWS.—'As a gift book, or as a book to take up and read at all moments, or to devour at a prolonged sitting, this book has few equals.'

DEEDS THAT WON THE EMPIRE. Twelfth Edition. With 16 Portraits and 11 Plans. Crown 8vo. 6s.

SPECTATOR.—'Not since Macaulay ceased to write has English literature produced a writer capable of infusing such life and vigour into historical scenes. . . The book cannot but take the reader by storm wherever it finds him.'

A SIMPLE GRAMMAR OF ENGLISH NOW IN USE. By JOHN EARLE, M.A., Rector of Swanswick; Rawlinsonian Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Oxford; Author of 'English Prose: its Elements, History, and Usage,' 'The Philology of the English Tongue,' &c. Crown 8vo. 6s.

'ATHENÆUM.—'Professor Earle's book is extremely interesting, and contains a great deal of original and useful information.'

GUARDIAN.—'Cannot fail to help anyone who reads it attentively to think and speak and write with accuracy and precision. . . We should like to see the "Simple Grammar" in the hands of every educated man and woman.'

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

ENGLISH PROSE: its Elements, History, and Usage. 8vo. 16s.

MODEL AND BLACKBOARD DRAWING

Crown 4to. 3s. 6d. net.

By F. F. LYDON,

Art Master, Parmiter's School; People's Palace School of Art; and Tottenham Training College.

Designed to cover the new requirements of the Board of Education in both the subjects of which it treats.

The book consists of 44 Plates, which divide themselves into three classes, dealing respectively with the geometric models proper, common objects based on them, and blackboard exercises, treated boldly, and reproduced white on black. There are 52 pages of descriptive letter-press, in which the usual difficulties of the student are fully dealt with.

AMBIDEXTROUS AND FREE-ARM BLACKBOARD DRAWING AND DESIGN

Crown 4to. 5s.

By F. F. LYDON.

This work, in addition to a fully illustrated description of the forty-eight graduated plates, which are designed as a progressive course in free-arm drawing and design, gives numerous photographic blocks and diagrams illustrative of the method of work described, and of the best ways to fit up the class-room for the study of this subject. The letter-press shows how the subject may be inexpensively introduced into any school, and made an accessory to the ordinary drawing lesson. The forty-eight exercises, which begin with the simplest curves and work up to examples of floral design, are also issued as four packets of drawing cards suitable for class teaching. All the copies, as befits the subject, are effectively reproduced white on a black background to represent actual blackboard drawing.

APPROVED SCHOOL BOOKS BY DR. CORNWELL, F.R.C.S.

'We are qualified by ample trial of the books in our own classes to speak to their great efficiency and value. We have never known so much interest evinced or so much progress made as since we have employed these as our school books.'—EDUCATIONAL TIMES.

A SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY. 88th Edition, 3s. 6d.; or with Thirty Maps, 5s. 6d.

'Very superior to the common run of such books. It contains a good deal of useful matter of a more practical kind than usual, which the exercises are likely to impress on the mind more deeply than by the parrot system.'—ATHENÆUM.

A SCHOOL ATLAS. Consisting of Thirty Small Maps. A companion Atlas to the Author's 'School Geography.' 2s. 6d., or 4s. coloured.

GEOGRAPHY FOR BEGINNERS. 68th Edition, 1s.; or, with 48 pp. of Questions, 1s. 4d. Questions, 6d.

'A very useful Series of Educational Works, of which Dr. Cornwell is either author or editor. It ("The Geography for Beginners") is an admirable introduction. There is a vast difficulty in writing a good elementary book, and Dr. Cornwell has shown himself possessed of that rare combination of faculties which is required for the task.'—JOHN BULL.

POETRY FOR BEGINNERS: a Selection of Short and Easy Poems for Reading and Recitation. 13th Edition, 1s.

ALLEN AND CORNWELL'S SCHOOL GRAMMAR. 65th Edition, 2s. red leather; or 1s. 9d. cloth.

'The excellence of the Grammar published by the late Dr. Allen and Dr. Cornwell makes us almost despair of witnessing any decided improvement in this department.'—ATHENÆUM.

GRAMMAR FOR BEGINNERS: an Introduction to Allen and Cornwell's 'School Grammar.' 88th Edition, 1s. cloth; 9d. sewed.

'This simple Introduction is as good a book as can be used.' SPECTATOR.

The Book is enlarged by a Section on Word-Building, with Exercises for Young Children.

THE YOUNG COMPOSER: Progressive Exercises in English Composition. 48th Edition, 1s. 6d. KEY, 3s.

'The plan of the work is very superior. We are persuaded this little work will be found valuable to the intelligent instructor.'—WESTMINSTER REVIEW.

SPELLING FOR BEGINNERS: a Method of Teaching Reading and Spelling at the same time. 4th Edition, 1s.

THE SCIENCE OF ARITHMETIC: Systematic Course of Numerical Reasoning and Computations. With very numerous Exercises. By JAMES CORNWELL, Ph.D., and Sir JOSHUA G. FITCH, LL.D. 26th Edition. 4s. 6d.

'The best work on arithmetic which has yet appeared. It is both scientific and practical in the best and fullest sense.' LONDON QUARTERLY.

KEY to SCIENCE OF ARITHMETIC. With the Method of Solution to every Question. 4s. 6d.

SCHOOL ARITHMETIC. 18th Edition. 1s. 6d. KEY, 4s. 6d.

'Eminently practical, well stored with examples of wider range and more varied character than are usually given in such books, and, its method of treatment being thoroughly inductive, it is pre-eminently the book for general use.'

ENGLISH JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

EDUCATION AND PUBLISHERS.

It cannot be said that education in the United Kingdom suffers from want of intercourse between its professors and teachers; indeed, it may be said that there is some danger of its suffering from too much 'conference' and 'congress.'

Of course, at the recent meetings of headmasters at Bradfield and Norwich, and at the Scotch Teachers' Congress at Dundee, many excellent suggestions were made; but, like good seed too thickly sown, one chokes the other, and the Board of Education laughs in its sleeve. It may not, perhaps, be quite true to say, as we have heard one schoolmaster of the 'old school' say, that if there were less talking and more teaching the practical results would be more evident than they are. That is a question we should not presume to consider except relatively; that is to say, in so far as these conferences and exhibitions connected with education affect the publishers of educational works.

A glance through the pages of this issue of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR will show what a great amount of enterprise and energy and capital is employed in the publication of educational works in this country; and if it is true that we are behind the Germans in matters relating to education, it certainly is not from any failure on the part of our publishers to produce good books.

The competition in this particular branch of publishing is becoming so intense that it looks as if we might have a congress of educational publishers before long to consider if it is really necessary to exhibit against each other, to travel and push against each other, to undersell and cut out each other, on every possible occasion. At present, no sooner does some new educational work or series promise to be a success than it is threatened by some rival, started with the sole object of supplanting it. The result is that by the time one has killed the other the schoolmasters are tired of both, and have adopted some other enterprise.

And this competition is not confined to the United Kingdom, it is every year becoming more accentuated in every part of the Empire; in our Colonies, in Canada and India, no sooner does an English house succeed, after great expense, in getting a series of school books adopted than it finds the Education Department favouring some inferior imitation produced locally and backed by local influence. To fight at all in such a case means cutting prices until all margin for profit has disappeared.

That the best interests of education suffer by this competition is unquestionable, it makes anything like continuity in educational methods almost impossible. To suggest any plan which would obviate the waste of capital on the part of publishers, and of time and energy on the part of schoolmasters, caused by the present uncertainty as to the 'life' of any educational work or 'series' would be difficult. But it would, we think, be a great step in the right direction if, for instance, such a body as the 'Head Teachers' Federation' or an Association of Headmasters agreed that any educational work adopted in any of their schools or colleges should be used for a certain number of years, that it should not be discarded without the consent of the Association, and that at least a year's notice should be given to the publisher of it before its use was discontinued. With the certainty before him that he could count on a certain demand, the publisher would be encouraged to keep the work up to date, knowing that its continued use would depend on its merits. The masters would benefit by not having to learn new methods suddenly, and the scholars would benefit by being taught systematically.

Another great advantage of the adoption of some such plan as this would be that the Associated Masters would have a voice in the question of the form and manner in which their school books were produced, as well as in their matter. It cannot be pretended that the diverse 'methods' of teaching different subjects aid education generally, or that some organised system would not be a real benefit to all concerned in the production and use of school books.

Of the effect of the education of our day, as compared with that of the opening years of last century, the war in South Africa affords a good criterion. Wellington said of the men sent to him to form into soldiers in Spain that they were the 'scum of the earth,' brave as lions and savage as lions. What is the character of the quarter of a million of men gathered together to-day from all parts of our Empire for its defence in South Africa? Friend and foe alike tell us that their bravery shames not the best traditions of our race; that they are merciful in victory, undaunted by defeat, and patient and gentle under the worst assaults of hunger and disease and direst privations. Lord Roberts tells us that he loves the men he has commanded, and that they are gentlemen. Now, from 'scum of the earth' to 'gentlemen' is a great advance, even in a century, and to what can it be attributed if not to improved education?

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Next week Messrs. Cassell & Co. commence the publication of their 'Century Edition' of 'Cassell's History of England.' Among the important features of this edition will be a large number of very fine coloured plates—each part is to have one—as well as a great many new black-and-white illustrations—nearly 2,000 in all. In their prospectus the publishers state that:—

'The new coloured plates, which are being specially prepared, will form a distinguishing feature of the highest importance.

'They will consist of reproductions, executed in the best style of modern colour-printing, of paintings by leading artists representing great events in the history of the English people, chosen from the national collections and picture galleries of our country, and from works of art of acknowledged merit by modern artists of eminence. Permission has been readily accorded for their reproduction by various authorities in view of the unique character of the work they are designed to illustrate.

'Never before has such a collection of pictures dealing with the history of our country been brought together, so perfectly produced, and published in a manner so attractive, popular, and easily accessible. They will, indeed, form an unrivalled gallery of historical works of art.'

We wish Messrs. Cassell, who have done so much for popular education, every success with their great undertaking.

What is the most neglected subject in our English schools? The answer is English grammar and English generally, and now that the German Emperor has made the study of English compulsory in German schools we may soon expect to find that English 'made in Germany' will beat our home product. The Germans long ago claimed to know their Shakespeare far better than we do, and now Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. announce an important series of Old and Middle English Texts, edited by the distinguished scholars L. Morsbach and F. Holthausen, professors respectively at the universities of Göttingen and Kiel. Each text will be accompanied by an introduction, notes, and glossary, for the excellence of which the editors' names are a sufficient guarantee. The first volume, 'Havelok,' edited by F. Holthausen, has already appeared, and a number of others—'Beowulf,' 'Cynewulf's 'Elene,' 'The Pearl,' &c., are in preparation.

The new quarterly Journal of Hygiene (Cambridge University Press) makes an excellent start with its first number; indeed, if it can maintain the standard of the January number, it must rapidly take high rank among the scientific publications of the day. It is edited by Professor Geo. H. Nuttall, Lecturer in Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine in Cambridge University, in conjunction with Dr. John S. Haldane, Lecturer in Physiology in the University of Oxford, and Dr. A. N. Newsholme, Medical Officer of Health for Brighton. There is a long and strong list of contributors. The aim of the work is to serve as a focus to English-speaking investigators for work in physics, chemistry, physiology, pathology, bacteriology, parasitology, and epidemiology. It is handsomely printed on a large page (10½ in. by 7 in.), and illustrated with coloured and other diagrams. We congratulate English science on starting the new century with so well-equipped a medium of intercommunication.

Yet another edition of Walton! Messrs. Macmillan's Library of English Classics begins the new year with two very different but perennially delightful books: Izaak Walton's 'Complete Angler,' with which are included the Lives of Donne, Wotton, Hooker, Herbert, and Sanderson; and De Quincey's 'Confessions of an English Opium Eater,' along with the essays on 'Murder Considered as one of the Fine Arts,' 'The English Mail Coach,' and 'The Spanish Military Nun.' The text of the 'Opium Eater' reproduces the expanded form of the work as revised by De Quincey for the first collected edition of his works, and contains, therefore, many passages not to be found in Dr. Garnett's 1885 reprint of the original version. In the same (1854) edition of the works a supplement was added to the essay on Murder, which is so different in tone that Mr. Pollard has omitted it in order to find room for the other two essays.

The text of the 'Complete Angler' is taken from the fifth edition, the last published in Walton's life, and the additional parts affixed to the 1676 edition by Cotton and Venables, are of course omitted. Of the lives, the first four are reprinted from the fourth edition of 1675: that of Sanderson from a 'Second Impression' bound up with the 1681 issue of Sanderson's 'Thirty-five Sermons.' This reprint has a certain interest, as all previous editors have printed from the original text issued hastily in 1678 to meet a demand, and they have suppressed Walton's Postscript, which promises a revision in case opportunity should offer. Walton was then eighty-five, and the promised revision did not attain any importance; but the text is now for the first time reproduced with the author's final alterations, such as they are.

Sir George Kekewich, speaking at Preston last month, said that if, not very many years ago, a teacher had ventured to prophesy that the Secretary of the Board of Education would come down and meet the teachers of Preston, and stand unashamed before them, that prophet would have been described as mad. He rejoiced in the present harmony and union between the Board of Education and its teachers. No profession could be more honourable, or of greater importance to the State, than that of the teacher. It was difficult, too, and should not be made needlessly so by remediable worries and grievances.

* *

That they will publish on Jan. 25 Part I. of a serial entitled 'Mysteries of Police and Crime,' by Major Arthur Griffiths, is a somewhat startling announcement to come from Messrs. Cassell & Co., Ltd. It is to contain the record of almost all the great crimes and criminals of the past century. The way of transgressors is indeed hard; their punishment formerly was to be hung, drawn, and quartered, now it is to be 'published in parts.' Of course, in the very able hands of Major Arthur Griffiths even the worst crimes become attractive and safe for serial publication. Messrs. W. & A. K. Johnston's new pocket map of Africa ought to be included with it—it shows the possessions of the European Powers in different colours, and there is a table showing how each territory has been acquired, with interesting statistics.

* *

Are we to have a flood of 'Love-Letters'? Messrs. Harper & Brothers will publish in February 'The Love-Letters of Victor Hugo,' being the letters written by the great Frenchman to his fiancée, Mlle. Adèle Foucher, from 1820 to 1822; and 'The Love-Letters of Bismarck,' the letters which Bismarck wrote to his fiancée and wife Fräulein Puttkamer.

Among the contents of the New Liberal Review, which is to appear on January 24, will be: 'The Liberal Leadership,' a Symposium by G. W. E. Russell, Rev. Guinness Rogers, D.D., Sir Edward Russell, Justin McCarthy, R. W. Perks, M.P.; 'The Reconstruction of the Cabinet,' by the Right Hon. the Earl of Crewe; 'L.C.C.: Three Years of Progressive Work,' by T. McKinnon Wood, ex-Chairman L.C.C.; 'Ruskin and the New Liberalism,' by E. T. Cook; 'Lessons of the War in South Africa,' by the Right Hon. Sir Charles Dilke, Bart., M.P.; 'The Poetry of Mr. Kipling,' by Prof. Dowden, LL.D., D.C.L.; 'A Club in Ruins,' by Max Beer-bohm; 'Mr. F. Carruthers Gould and his Work,' by Arthur Lawrence. The New Liberal will be edited by Mr. Cecil B. and Mr. H. A. Harmsworth. It is curious, but Mr. Alfred C. Harmsworth is, we believe, the only Conservative in the family.

Messrs. W. & A. K. Johnston, Limited, who produced the very fine general map of South Africa given in Vol. I. of 'The Times History of the War in South Africa,' have recently issued new editions of the following important educational publications: 'The Howard Vincent Map of the British Empire,' for schools, public libraries, &c., with handbook (this map has been adopted by the London School Board); a new edition of their 'Large School Wall Map of South Africa,' size 50 by 42 inches; a new edition, revised to date, of their 'Illustration of Mechanical Powers,' containing 47 diagrams, size 50 by 42 inches, with handbook; and a fifth edition of 'The World-Wide Atlas,' 128 coloured maps, and index to 68,000 places, royal 4to., handsomely bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

* *

Under the title 'School Management and Methods of Instruction,' Messrs. Macmillan publish a work, prepared by Mr. George Collar (of the Stockwell Pupil-Teachers' School) and Mr. C. W. Crook (Head Master of the Higher Grade School, Wood Green), which should be of great value to all teachers in elementary schools and also to parents of children under instruction. Beginning with the School and Home, they discuss the questions of attendance and of home-work; they pass then to School Buildings and Equipments. A long and detailed chapter on Organisation is followed by one on Discipline; and then questions of teaching proper are discussed, first in general, then in reference to particular subjects—reading, spelling, the teaching of languages, including composition, history and geography, mathematical studies, elementary science. Next come the practical subjects, writing and drawing; and finally school music and physical exercise. There is much in the book which may be commended to the notice of public school masters as well as to the class for which it is specially composed.

'Emperor William has, by an edict to the Prussian Minister of Education, Dr. Studt, given his consent to further reforms of secondary schools in the spirit of those instituted eight or nine years ago. The claims of the three classes of higher secondary schools are to be settled on the principle of their general educational equivalency. The consequent extension of the privileges of the Realschulen, it is hoped, will prove the best means of raising these institutions in the favour of the people, and of increasing their attendance. The so-called Reformgymnasien (at Altona, Frankfort, and a score of other places), with a common substructure of four years, are pronounced a success, and the plan is to be continued and extended. Aside from these general provisions, the Emperor desires that more prominence be given to the study of English in the gymnasia, even at the expense of French, and he has no objection to the strengthening of Latin in the gymnasium and Realgymnasium, considering that, the equal value of the three types of higher secondary schools once recognised, each may advantageously emphasise its own peculiarities. On the whole, the royal educationalist indulges the hope that the antagonism between the humanistic and the realistic tendencies in higher education will be lessened in consequence of the new regulations. The introduction of the Russian language in some of the Berlin gymnasia, which was not long ago mentioned in these columns, has led to the adoption of the same measure in one or two of the schools of the Bavarian capital.—New York Nation.

Mr. William Black's novels, of which over a quarter of a million copies have been sold in the Half-crown Editions alone, are about to be re-issued by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. in a new uniform binding at two shillings.

'William Shakespeare: Poet, Dramatist, and Man,' is a critical biography by a well-known American man of letters, Mr. Hamilton Wright Mabie, who handles the familiar material in a scholarly manner. The previous history of the stage is summed up in a suggestive chapter, and Mr. Mabie writes with keen appreciation of the Warwickshire landscape and its influence on the poet's mind. A notable feature of the book is the profuse illustrations—a hundred pictures in all, including nine full-page plates in photogravure. The reproductions of the leading Shakespeare portraits are admirable, and there are also good heads of Jonson, Chapman, Nash, Fletcher, Beaumont, Drayton, and Spenser, as well as of Elizabeth herself, Bacon, Essex, Leicester, Sydney, Raleigh, Burleigh, and, not least important, Sir Thomas Lucy. The publishers are the Macmillan Co.

Messrs. C. J. Clay & Sons, the Cambridge University Press, have just issued a pamphlet giving the revised list of prices of 'The Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges.' The great work, which is under the general editorship of Dr. Perowne, Bishop of Worcester, and Dr. Fitzpatrick, Regius Professor of Hebrew, is now nearly completed.

Mr. A. Brimley Johnson will publish immediately an important work on the Afghan Campaign of 1880, entitled 'The Bombay Field Force, 1880, and Battle of Maiwand.' The book is from the pen of Major-General Sir John Hills, R.E., K.C.B. Many insinuations have been thrown out against the courage and steadiness of the Bombay Field Force during the operations, and these it has been the author's object to refute. At this time it is interesting to observe that a note at the beginning of the book states that 'publication was deferred from the end of 1899, as it was held undesirable that it should take place during the absence of Lord Roberts from England.'

Messrs. Jarrold & Sons are publishing, in their new 'Author's Edition,' Helen Mathers' novel, 'Murder or Manslaughter?' with a frontispiece portrait of the author.

'Sir John Tenniel, his Life and Work,' is to be the subject of 'The Easter Art Annual,' being the Spring extra number of the Art Journal; Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse has undertaken the letterpress, and there will be about forty illustrations of Tenniel's work.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish immediately an important work in two volumes by the late Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, entitled 'Disciples of Æsculapius,' biographies of the leaders of medicine. The book will contain a memoir of Sir B. W. Richardson by his daughter, and also 408 portraits of the great men dealt with. Sir Benjamin was at the task more or less steadily for twenty-five years—it was a hobby with him.

Mr. Murray will publish immediately 'A Treatise on Medical Jurisprudence,' based on lectures delivered at University College, London, by G. Vivian Poore, M.D., with illustrations.

The Outlook says: 'It is pleasant to find a poet in this temper:

'Be failure mine, not fame;
Let not the ignorant, applauding crowd
With coarse Hosannas loud, Worse than the carping critic's venal blame,
Flout my dishonoured name.
I alone know the goal I strive to win,
How strait the gate, how few may enter
in. . . .
Brief is our road, evil and few our days,
Spare then the insult of unworthy

The poet is Sir Lewis Morris, Kt., M.A., and the quotation is from his 'Harvest-Tide,' just published by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co. Our brilliant contemporary thinks Sir Lewis takes himself 'too seriously.'

Messrs. Rivington announce for immediate publication the following new devotional book, 'The Pilgrim's Path,' a book of prayer for busy people, with instructions and illustrations, compiled by Frederick E. Mortimer, Rector of St. Mark's Church, Jersey City, and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Newark, U.S.A., with a preface by the Rev. Alfred G. Mortimer, D.D., Rector of St. Mark's, Philadelphia.

The Saturday Review said some years ago that 'there is not a person of ordinary average intelligence and strength who could not learn from Work how, in a short time, to make a living. In the current number of Work we find an 8-page supplement showing by actual testimonials how mechanics in all trades, and handicraftsmen of all kinds, have benefited by studying this invaluable journal.

We are glad to know that this penny illustrated journal for mechanics—Work—has such a large circle of readers; it supplies in a quiet undemonstrative way just that 'First Aid' in technical education which so often leads to a successful career. It is one of the most useful of Messrs. Cassell's many useful publications. In the January 12 number an illustrated article on 'How to Bind Books' commences.

Mr. Samuel Gordon's 'Sons of the Covenant,' the novel treating of Anglo-Jewry which Messrs. Sands & Co. published some weeks back, is attracting much attention both in and out of Jewish circles. In recognition of the book, which is admitted on all hands to be a striking and valuable study of modern Jews and Jewish characteristics, the Maccabæans, the representative Jewish club, will entertain Mr. Gordon at dinner on the 20th inst., Mr. I. Zangwill in the chair. After dinner there will be a discussion on the solution, suggested by Mr. Gordon's book, of the vital problem which has long been exercising the minds of the communal leaders. From the nature of it, this is expected to be one of the most important Jewish gatherings of recent years.

Messrs. Clay will publish shortly a 'Key to West's "Elements of English Grammar,"' the most neglected subject in our English schools.

'Bret Harte: a Treatise and a Tribute,' is the title of Mr. T. Edgar Pemberton's latest book, which Messrs. Greening & Co. will publish immediately. Mr. Bret Harte contributes a foreword, in the shape of a letter to Mr. Pemberton, and the volume also contains a new portrait of the popular novelist. As this is the first biography of Mr. Bret Harte, it will, no doubt, attract considerable attention.

Mr. B. L. Farjeon's new novel, 'Pride of Race,' will be published shortly by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. It is the love story of the daughter of an English aristocrat and the son of a Jew who has risen to great wealth. It is also a study on the question of marriage between Jew and Christian.

'The Prettiness of Fools' is the title of a new novel by Mr. Edgar Hewitt which will be issued next week by Messrs. Greening.

At Easter there will be a reception in Paris, by three of the five Academies which form the Institute (the Académie Française and the Académie des Beaux-Arts being excluded), of all similar bodies in the world, and the Royal Society will attend from the United Kingdom. The visit will not improbably be returned in London in 1904.—Athenæum.

What promises to be a very useful technical manual for papermakers and others interested in the paper industry is a work on 'The Dyeing of Paper Pulp,' by Julius Erfurt, translated by Julius Hübner. There are to be 157 patterns of papers dyed in the pulp, and other illustrations; the publishers are Messrs. Scott, Greenwood & Co., 19 Ludgate Hill, E.C.

Mr. Theodore Watts-Dunton has accepted the dedication of Mr. George Bartram's forthcoming volume of folk-lore verses, 'Ballads of Ghostly Shires,' which Messrs. Greening & Co. are about to publish.

Mr. Compton Reade's forthcoming novel, which Messrs. Greening & Co. have in hand for early publication, is called 'The After-taste.'

* *

Who is going to publish the 'amorphous unwieldy catalogue of some hundred thousand names' of teachers which was the subject of discussion recently at the Headmasters' Conference?

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish shortly a novel entitled 'A Wayside Weed,' by A. F. Slade.

AMERICAN NOTES.

(From the Publishers' Weekly.)

The American Cat News is the title of an illustrated monthly magazine for cat lovers, published at 604 Cable Building, Chicago. The magazine, which is the first of its kind in America, aims to inform those who wish to know 'all about cats and catteries, learn the latest news of the cat clubs, and keep thoroughly posted about all that goes on in catdom.' The first number is dated December, and the January issue will be ready at once. It is neatly printed, and contains pictures of famous cats.

M. Le Soudier, Paris, will publish shortly a second edition of 'Bibliographie Française,' which made its first appearance in 1896. This new edition, which is thoroughly revised and brought up to date, will contain several catalogues not included in the issue of 1896, and is so greatly enlarged that, whereas the first edition was complete in six volumes, the second will form ten volumes, and the total number of pages will be about 9,000.

One of the giant peaks of the Canadian Rockies, upwards of 11,000 feet high, recently discovered by Samuel Evans S. Allen, F.R.G.S., has been named after his friend, A. J. Drexel Biddle, the Philadelphia publisher.

Some years ago, when the most beautiful trout of North America was discovered, it was named after an English publisher, Mr. R. B.

Marston, editor of the Fishing Gazette, for having done 'more than any other man to promote good feeling between the anglers of England and America.' We understand Mr. Marston intends to have this compliment engraved on his tombstone.

DEATH OF DR. CREIGHTON, BISHOP OF LONDON.

The announcement of the death of the Bishop of London has been received with expressions of deep regret, not only from the sons and daughters of the Church of England, but also from people of all denominations. It is rare for an English bishop not to enter the fields of literature, and Dr. Creighton was no exception. The following list of his works is from 'Who's Who': 'Roman History Primer,' 1875; 'Life of Simon de Montfort,' 1876; 'Age of Elizabeth,' 1876; 'The Tudors and the Reformation,' 1876; 'History of the Papacy during the Reformation' (5 vols.) 1882-94; 'Life of Wolsey,' 1884; 'History of Carlisle,' 1889; 'Persecution and Tolerance,' 1894; 'The Early Renaissance in England,' 1895; 'The English National Character,' 1896; 'The Story of some English Shires,' 1897. Dr. Creighton was editor of the English Historical Review from 1886 to 1891; as a Governor of Harrow School he took great interest in educational matters.

II.—A LETTER TO A YOUNG PUBLISHER.

'In thanking me for the hints I gave you recently on the art of advertising, you observe that even though you sell a large number of copies, advertising is an expensive business, and that the net pecuniary gain to yourself of what is called a "successful" novel is by no means large. Moreover, you add, successful authors are few in number, and have a nasty trick of insisting upon uncommonly high royalties.

'My dear Jones, if you are really to succeed in your business, you must understand at once that the bulk of your income is to come not from the successful books, but (paradox as it seems) from the unsuccessful. . . . I have read Heart-Throbs—as the MS. is called—sufficiently to confirm your estimate of it. More undiluted drivel it would be hard to conceive. It is dull, foolish, badly-written; without one redeeming feature. But as for returning it, that would be nothing less than the criminal waste of an opportunity. Follow my instructions, and you shall make a pretty penny out of Heart-Throbs.

'First, you will write to the author and assure him that your "reader"—you can consider me your reader for the nonce—has reported most favourably upon the MS. Of course, you will add, there is grave risk about bringing out the work of an unknown man, but, in consideration of the exceptional merit of Heart-Throbs, you are willing to brave it. All that you will ask the author to do is to pay £80 towards the cost of production, while you will undertake to supply the demand up to a thousand copies. On all copies sold above that number you will pay him a royalty of twenty or thirty—you can promise safely anything you like—per cent.

'The author will be delighted at the reader's "favourable report." He may boggle a bit about the £80, in which case—I have left you plenty of margin—you may knock off £5 or even £10 as a special favour, as a sign, too, of your belief in the book. Then, or I am greatly mistaken, you will have him. He is young, he is well-off, he has unbounded faith in his work, which faith your letter has judiciously strengthened. And so, having cashed his cheque, you proceed to play your fish at your leisure. You have only bound yourself, you see, to supply the demand up to a thousand copies—wherefore you will, at a cost of £25 or thereabouts, print and bind 100 copies—and you will take good care that the demand shall not exceed that number. Thereby you will pocket £55—not a bad haul, considering that you've run no sort of risk for it. And, if you like, you can send in by-and-bye another bill of £10 or so for "advertising," and "cost of extra proof corrections." If he remonstrates, you can talk gravely of your risk, your heavy office-expenses, &c., and you will be surprised and grieved that the sale of the book has not got beyond 50 copies. It is just possible that at this point your client may go to the Society of Authors, but that needn't concern you. You have made your £50 or £60 out of Heart-Throbs, and the supply of fools, thank heaven! is unfailing. Only, you will deplore his lack of confidence, and the passing away of the good old days, when no Authors' Societies existed.'

UNLAWFUL USE OF THE SOCIETY OF AUTHORS AS THE BOGEY MAN.

Mr. G. Herbert Thring, Secretary of the Society of Authors, writes to the papers to say that 'the attention of the Society of Authors has been called to the fact that persons who are not members of the Society have, from time to time, asserted to publishers, editors, and others that they would call in the aid of the Society of Authors in support of their claims. Anyone having reason to suppose that an unauthorised use is being made of the Society's name should communicate with the Secretary and give him full details of the case. The Secretary will, on receipt on such a statement, be glad to give information as to whether the persons using the Society's name are in fact members, and, if they are members, whether they are acting with the knowledge or sanction of the Society.'

[Would it not simplify matters if the Society of Authors published a list of its members?]

ED. 'P. C.']

OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND THE ARMY.

Mr. J. S. Phillpotts, Headmaster of Bedford School, is evidently the right man in the right place. Speaking at the Bradfield Conference on the present regulations as regards the examination of candidates for commissions in the army passing through the militia, he said: 'As representatives of education in England they should make a unanimous and firm stand in favour of keeping up the standard of literary and intellectual education for officers in the army. The young candidates going into the militia went for so many months in the year, and the rest of the year they had nothing to do—a little elementary mathematics and a little French and German. That was all they had to do from seventeen to nineteen as regarded their literary education. He could not think that any step could be more disastrous, and it was extraordinary that the War Office did not see what was required of an officer in modern war; how very much greater were the requirements for everything intellectual than they were in the old times. The standard of education among the men was rising, and that of the officers should rise also. He contended that it was best for the nation, for the army, for the boy, and for the parent that there should be the intellectual and moral training given in the public schools.'

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF

No. 2.—THOMAS GUY.

The fame of Thomas Guy does not rest upon him as a bookseller, but as a philanthropist; it is true that by great industry, great frugality, and great tact he made much money as a bookseller, but, unlike his contemporary Jacob Tonson, he did not seek to attach his name to the works of great authors—such as Dryden, Pope, and Addison. The Bible first and the Great South Sea Bubble next were the chief sources of his wealth. 'The Dictionary of National Biography' states, however, that he published numerous books, and his imprint is not so rare as has been represented.

From his earliest days he seems to have resolved to be rich, not, according to all accounts that I can gather, for the sake of being rich, but from a real desire to do good in his generation and the generations that should come after him. Mr. Charles Knight, quoting mainly from Mr. William Maitland's memoir of Guy prefixed to his account of Guy's Hospital, published in his 'History of London' in 1739, tells us that Guy was born in the north-east corner of Pritchard's Alley, in Fair Street, Horselydown, in the year 1645, but the precise date is not given. The statue says 1644.

His father was a lighterman and coal-dealer; he died when his son was eight years old. His mother was a native of Tamworth, and after her husband's death she returned to that town, and soon afterwards married again.

Mr. Roberts states that a writer in the Gentleman's Magazine, 1784, page 340, says that Tamworth was the place of young Guy's birth; but the probabilities are in favour of Mr. Maitland's more precise statement; the latter authority says that Mrs. Guy 'was careful to have her children carefully educated.' Thomas's education from the age of eight to eleven was in all probability in Tamworth.

He was bound apprentice September 3, 1660, to John Clarke, a bookseller, in the porch of Mercers' Hall, Cheapside; and in 1668 he became a freeman of the City of London and of the Stationers' Company; he commenced business with a capital of £200.

Up to this point there is much similarity in the careers of Guy and Tonson (a sketch of whose life appeared in our two last numbers). Both were shrewd, careful, and plodding, and both started with the intention of amassing wealth through the medium of the business in which they had been educated; there is, however, little or no evidence to show that either of them possessed any educational advantages or literary or intellectual gifts that should distinguish them from hundreds of their fellow tradesmen who have departed and left no trace behind them—Literature happened to be their trade, and they cultivated it at first doubtless on a little oatmeal, not however for its own sake, but as a means to bear them on to fortune.

Tonson's ambition seems to me to have been of the bullying, blustering sort, which eventually enabled him to patronise great authors and hob-a-nob with dukes and lords at the Kit-Cat Club.

'Sweating and puffing for awhile he stood,
And then broke forth in this insulting mood;
I am the touchstone of all modern wit;
Without my stamp in vain your poets write.'
(From 'Faction Displayed'.)

His name will be carried down to remote generations on the title-page of the books of the greatest writers of his time, not as a great benefactor, but as a fortunate plodding tradesman.

Thomas Guy's ambition to make money seems to me to have been of the purely unselfish sort. He lived penuriously, and grew rich with the single purpose of doing good with his riches.

He started in business in 1668, two years after the Great Fire, in a little newly-built shop near Stocks Market. The shop was at the angle formed by Cornhill and Lombard Street, described by Maitland as the 'little corner shop.'

Charles Knight says that the area upon which the Mansion House now stands was for some centuries the market for butchers and fishmongers, deriving its name from 'The Stocks,' which were set up in the public thoroughfare for the punishment of evil-doers. The whole place was swept clear by the Great Fire of 1666.

The position which Guy had chosen was an admirable one. Within a year after he had opened his shop the second Exchange was opened with great pomp.

Mr. Knight fancifully portrays young Guy sitting in his little shop amidst his small stock of books of the value of £200, restless at the want of occupation, and envying the great merchant adventurers congregating at the Exchange, whose ships brought the produce of every land to the port of London.

Mr. Guy was a good Protestant, and as he sat in his shop, too often unvisited by customers, he meditated frequently on the large trade he could command if it was in his power to offer godly people well-printed and cheap Bibles.

The King's printer and the two universities possessed the exclusive privilege of printing the Bible, a monopoly which still remains with the Universities. The Oxford Bibles were chiefly for the use of the churches, but those issued by the King's printer were full of the grossest errors, which, as Curwen says, caused Thomas Fuller to write, under the quaint heading 'Fye, for Shame!' 'What is but carelessness in other books is impiety in setting forth of the Bible.' Maitland relates that at the time when Guy opened his shop the English Bibles printed in this kingdom being very bad, both in the letter and paper, occasioned divers of the booksellers in this city to encourage the printing thereof in Holland, with curious types and fine paper, and they imported vast numbers of the same, to their no small advantage.

Mr. Guy, soon becoming acquainted with this profitable commerce, became a large dealer therein. Mr. Knight, in his imaginary picture, says that Guy, not trusting the Dutch compositors, would carefully revise the proof sheets so that they should not print such terrible blunders as were printed in the Bible of 1653: 'Know ye not that the *un*righteous shall inherit the kingdom of God.' He had learned from Mr. Selden's 'Table Talk' that in a Bible printed in the reign of Charles I. the word not was left out of the seventh commandment, for which blunder the printer was heavily fined.

The Spectator wickedly suggested that, judging from the morals of the day, very many copies must have got into continuous circulation.

It was found, however, that this trade of importing Bibles from Holland was injurious to the public revenue as well as to the King's printer; all ways and means were devised to quash it, and consequently, owing to frequent seizures and prosecutions, the booksellers became great sufferers, so they judged a further pursuit thereof inconsistent with their interests. They could not stand out against the power of the King's printer and the two Universities, although as a matter of fact the King's printer and the Universities were not by any means in a state of cordial relationship.

IN GERMANY.

It is curious that almost simultaneously with Messrs. Stoneham's acceptance of the net book system comes the news that Messrs. Mayer & Müller, of Berlin and Leipzig, have also at last given way on the discount question.

For fifteen years this important firm has fought the German Booksellers' Union, and been a thorn in its flesh; and in announcing their victory the Council of the Union congratulate both sides on the result.

LOAN EXHIBITION OF MODERN ILLUSTRATION.

The above most interesting Exhibition, under the management of the Board of Education, is now open at the Victoria and Albert Museum, South Kensington, and should be visited by all interested in the illustration of books and periodicals. It enables one to trace progress from the middle of last century to the present time, and the gradual development of the photographic and more mechanical methods of illustration by line and half-tone blocks. There are many original sketches and drawings by such artists as Sir F. Leighton, Sir J. E. Millais, Sir E. Burne-Jones, Sir William Morris, John Ruskin, and others. The artists of the Punch staff, past and present, are also well represented.

THE PRICE OF CHEAP WHITE PRINTING
PAPER TO BE 50 PER CENT. CHEAPER.

Minnesota, according to a special despatch to the New York Times, will, in the near future, be the great paper-making State of the Union. A syndicate, comprising almost all of the principal paper manufacturers of the country, has purchased 100,000 acres of spruce timber-land in the northern portion of the State, and taken an option on several thousand acres more, and will proceed to erect great pulp mills. It is said that the intention of the promoters is to make paper on such a large scale that the prices of common white paper will be cut in half.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our Correspondents.]

('Reformer' has not sent his name and address, and is referred to our rule on this matter.)

THE OLDEST REVIEW.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—Will you allow us, in reply to Mr. R. Brimley Johnson, to say that our intention in making the statement that the Fortnightly 'is the oldest of the monthly reviews' is not to convey to the public an idea that it is older than all reviews? There are the Quarterly (1806), the Edinburgh (1802), and others all considerably older, but these do not come under the heading of 'monthly reviews.' And as the Westminster Review did not become a monthly until April 1887, neither can it, obviously, come under the same heading except from that date.

The Westminster Review was established in 1824 as a quarterly: it became in 1836 the London and Westminster Review; in 1841 its title was altered back again to the Westminster Review; in 1847 it was called the Westminster and Foreign Quarterly Review; and again in 1872 it became plain Westminster Review again. During all this time, and up to January 1887, it remained a quarterly.

Its age, therefore, as a monthly review dates only as far back as April 1887, its first monthly issue; whereas the Fortnightly has been a monthly review since October 1865, twenty-two years longer than the Westminster.

We have, however, in deference to Mr. Johnson's scruples, decided to omit the phrase in our advertisements to which he objects.

CHAPMAN & HALL (LTD.).

THE NET BOOK SYSTEM.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—The net system of bookselling, according to those interested in the Publishers' Association, is a success, and no doubt the number of books so published will be greatly increased in the future.

Arguments at the time of introduction by members of the trade gave interesting details as to how the scheme would work, some anticipating failure with confidence, others equally sure of its success. The public grumbled a fair amount, but accepted the alteration with conforming quietness, and now pays its 4s. 6d. for 'Herod' with the feeling that it is a 6s. book less discount, the only difference being that trouble is saved them in deducting 25 per cent.

That the retail trade may be kept to a level of just dealing and a fairness met with from the 'publishers,' would it not be advisable for those firms who sell their own publications over the counter to the public to either discontinue doing so or make it a rule that two copies must be bought at the net published price? This simple method would not injure the publisher in any way, but rather interest the bookseller to 'stock' copies of a work that was being asked for, and if 'stocked' he would endeavour to sell, and so on. But no; the modern method (which, it is regretful to say, is increasing) is to advertise books at net prices plus postage, and quietly disregard retail booksellers altogether.

It is hoped that this letter will be the means of interesting booksellers in retaining a portion of their trade which is gradually leaving them, and that the offending publishers may be watched and books so advertised ignored. There are firms still who are honourable enough to state that copies can be obtained 'through any bookseller,' and it is for the trade to see that all should so advertise and stop unfair trading.

I beg to remain,

Dear Sir,

Yours faithfully,

A WEST END ASSISTANT.

London: Jan. 1901.

SIR,—I am interested in profit-getting, and ask you to kindly explain how I may succeed in its accomplishment under the net system of bookselling.

Is my freedom of action in the matter of buying and selling to be curtailed? or is the movement a huge joke, meant to put an end to the lethargy of the slow-coach bookseller?

Surely this ridiculous movement can never live.

Yours faithfully,

CLARA MILLARD.

[The object of the Net Book System is to secure to the Bookseller the profit which under the discount system was given to the public. The arrangement under which the system is now working was proposed by the Booksellers' Associations, and pressed on the Publishers as giving the only chance for renewed prosperity in the Bookselling Trade.—ED.]

DEAR SIR,—As one of your correspondents calls attention to the special hardships of the country bookseller under this system, I should like to emphasise that fact. The present net price is harder on the provincial man than the old system, as the small discount allowed gives him no profit; and now that the public get no discount there is no incentive to pay cash, and consequently books have to be charged to three, six, and sometimes nine months' account. This is a matter which probably does not concern the London bookseller, but is a very evident trouble to his country competitor, who has carriage to pay in addition; so that I think he ought to have a very liberal extra discount to make things equal, and practically the country bookseller is in the same dire straits as ever.

Yours truly,

Cheltenham: A COUNTRY BOOKSELLER.

Jan. 16, 1901.

[The curious part of it is that the agitation for the net system to be enforced came from the great majority of the booksellers in the country as well as in London.—ED.]

A GERMAN ON BOOK-PUFFING.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—As one residing far from any English large town I am unable to gauge the accuracy of the following statement, the responsibility for which rests with the German journal Allgemeine Zeitung. It certainly appears somewhat exaggerated.

'While to us in Germany the art of Gutenberg and its works is still reputed a kind of sacred possession that must be protected from obtrusive puffing so as not to be put in the same category with a soap or mustard, powerfully acting pill, or remarkably cheap glove, in England street advertising does not even cry Halt! before books. The sandwich men walk through the streets of large English towns in order to promote the sale of "The Book of the Season" or "The Poem of the Year."'

It is to be hoped this statement is not borne out by facts. But, after all, Macaulay used even stronger language when, in his article on Robert Montgomery, published so long ago as April 1830 in the Edinburgh Review, he wrote as follows:

'The puffing of books is now so shamefully and successfully carried on that it is the duty of all who are anxious for the purity of the national taste or for the honour of the literary character to join in discountenancing the practice. . . . Devices which in the lowest trades are considered as disreputable are adopted without scruple, and improved upon with a despicable ingenuity, by people engaged in a pursuit which never was and never will be considered as a mean trade by any man of honour and virtue.'

Yours faithfully,

A FOREIGNER.

ANOTHER STORY OF MR. KIPLING.

'The last time I was North,' said a New Orleans banker to a reporter of the New Orleans Times-Democrat, 'I heard a Kipling story which I don't think has ever been in print. It was told me by a gentleman who used to have a place in Vermont, not far from Kipling's old summer home, and who is at present assistant cashier in one of the big New York banks.

'He said that during the last year of Kipling's residence in Vermont he became alarmed at the growing expenses of the establishment and decided to keep a strict eye on the output. Accordingly he opened an account at a bank in a near-by town—I forget now which—and paid all the household bills with personal cheques. Many of them were very small, ranging in amount from fifty cents to $5, and the shrewd Yankee storekeepers of the neighbourhood soon discovered that they could get more for them from autograph fiends than they could from the paying teller. That was particularly the case when they attached a duplicate memorandum of the account. For example, a bill against Mr. Kipling for five pounds of cheese, accompanied by an autograph cheque for $1.25, was a souvenir that commanded a fancy price.

'The consequence was that a number of the cheques never found their way to the bank, and the author was greatly perplexed. He would send in his book once a month to be balanced, and it would invariably come back showing more to his credit than was indicated by the stubs.

'Kipling was unable to account for the discrepancy, and attributed it to his bad head for figures, until one day, when visiting in Boston, he ran across a small cheque given for a case of bottled beer framed and hanging in the study of a collector. That exposed the nefarious traffic, and the creator of Mulvaney was speechless with wrath and indignation. The first thing he did when he got home was to burn his cheque-book, and after that he insisted on paying all his bills in the coin of the realm.'

ARRIVAL IN ENGLAND OF MR. J. LIBERTY TADD,

Author of 'New Methods in Education,' to Lecture under the patronage of the Society of Arts.

Mr. J. Liberty Tadd, whose work 'New Methods in Education—Art, Real Manual Training, Nature Study,' has been so favourably received in this country as well as in America, arrived in London last week.

Mr. Tadd is to deliver a course of lectures before the Society of Arts, illustrated by lantern slides of various schools in America, showing pupils at work, and by drawings on blackboard. The first lecture was given on January 14, at 8 P.M., on 'Art and Manual Training in Education.' Lecture II. will be on January 21, 'Bent, Disposition, Capacity.' Lecture III.,

A WARNING TO ENGLISH EDITORS AND AUTHORS.

COPYRIGHT IN SERIAL MATTER.

[Mr. Brett, President of the Macmillan Company, New York, has addressed the following letter to the Athenæum. We reprint it with pleasure, as it contains a very useful suggestion, easily carried out, and calculated to prevent needless litigation.—ED. PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.]

'COPYRIGHT IN SERIAL MATTER.

'New York: December 22, 1900.

'I should be glad if you will kindly permit me through your widely read journal to call the attention of authors and publishers to the advisability of printing, in English periodicals where novels and other material is printed on which a copyright is obtained in the United States, the notice of copyright required by American law in this form: Copyright, followed by the name of the author or publishers, followed by the year—i.e. "Copyright by Maurice Hewlett, 1900," will do as an example.

'It frequently happens that an editor of an American magazine, being short of material, sees some article well suited to his needs in the current number of an English periodical, and promptly uses it, unmindful of the fact that he may be called upon for damages in case an American copyright has been taken out.

'Such a case is before me at the present time: an article, having appeared in the summer number of one of your well-known monthly reviews, has been reprinted in no less than three instances by different publishers of magazines in the United States; and as a result small books have appeared containing this matter, whereas the whole of the material was duly protected by copyright in advance of publication of the original article, as required by law.

'It is true that the author or owner of the copyright has in such cases recourse to law; but as it is also true that the law provides that the owner of the copyright shall show what damages he has suffered by the unauthorised publication of his material, and this is sometimes difficult to do in a satisfactory manner by the author before an ordinarily intelligent jury, it would, it seems to me, be much better if the copyright notices were printed in the original journal on publication in England, thus obviating the possibility of these reprints.

'Few decisions have been had as yet in this country under the American International Copyright Act, which went into effect in 1891, and it is sometimes difficult to prove that any damages have been suffered by the author or owner of the copyright which will warrant a jury in allowing the owner a sufficient sum to reimburse him for the trouble and costs of bringing the suit. Moreover, to go to law is as expensive and tedious in this country as it can well be anywhere, and should if possible be avoided.

'May I hope, then, that you will, in publishing this letter, add your good word to urge upon English authors and publishers issuing serially articles, or serials that have been copyrighted in the United States, the printing of the copyright notice which would aid so much in protecting the property on this side?

'GEORGE P. BRETT,
'President the Macmillan Company.'

DECISION AGAINST MR. KIPLING.

Judge Lacombe, in the United States Circuit Court, on December 26, denied the motion made by Mr. Rudyard Kipling's attorneys to restrain R. F. Fenno & Co. from publishing and selling editions of his works on which an elephant's head was used. The case was argued in November, and attracted a great deal of attention. The question of copyright was eliminated by the consent of both parties.

Judge Lacombe said that Mr. Kipling had not established a common-law trade-mark, and there was no suggestion of a statutory trade-mark. He said that there was no apprehension that purchasers of the 'Elephant's Head' edition might be misled by supposing that they were buying the 'Outward Bound' or any other edition of his works.—Publishers' Weekly.

RECENT EDUCATIONAL LITERATURE.

Messrs. Asher & Co.'s educational publications include a most important series of handbooks for teaching commercial correspondence in different languages—English, German, French, Spanish, and Italian. Many years ago a cheap little book was used in the German schools giving facsimile reproductions of all kinds of handwriting in actual copies of business and other letters. It was most useful in teaching how to read bad handwriting, and we have often wondered why something of the kind is not used in our schools. Another valuable series is 'Asher's International Reading Books,' for schools and for self-instruction, in German, French, Italian, and Spanish. New editions have been published of 'The Student's Hebrew Lexicon,' 'Gesenius's Student's Hebrew Grammar,' and Dr. Flügel's 'Universal English-German and German-English Dictionary.' One of the best English and German Dictionaries for school use is Messrs. Asher's 'Dictionary of the English and German Languages for Home and School,' by Flügel, Schmidt, and Tanger.

Among Messrs. A. & C. Black's recent educational works may be mentioned Mr. L. W. Lyde's excellent series of geographies—viz. 'A School Geography of the World,' 'A Geography of Europe,' 'A Geography of the British Isles,' 'A Geography of the British Empire,' 'A Geography of North America,' 'A Geography of South America,' 'A Geography of Africa,' 'A Geography of Asia,' 'An Elementary Geography of Europe.' Geography, as Mr. Lyde understands it, says the Glasgow Herald, does not consist of dreary lists of mountains and rivers, capes and bays, towns and islands. It is an intellectual exercise, and brings the reasoning faculties rather than the memory into play. Another 'geography' published by Messrs. Black is the 'Home Geography for London Children,' by the Rev. H. B. Ryley. This book first deals with the geographical features characteristic of London, and hints are given for various excursions round the suburbs in illustration of the subject—an excellent idea. Another elementary pictorial geography is 'World Pictures and Problems,' by Miss Joan B. Reynolds, B.A. The aim is to give a series of vivid and accurate pictures of parts of the earth's surface. 'Man and his World' is an introduction to Human Geography, by Dr. A. J. Herbertson and Mr. J. D. Herbertson, who are also joint authors of a series of six volumes called 'The New Descriptive Geographies,' of which 'Africa,' 'Central and South America,' and 'Australia, Malaysia, and the Pacific Isles' are ready, and 'Europe,' 'Asia,' and 'North America' are to appear this year. Messrs. Black's series of Synthetical Maps, by W. R. Taylor, are designed to supplement oral teaching; they have been found most useful in connection with Lyde's geographies, serving as guides and concentrating the pupil's attention on the industries, products, historical events, and chief features of each country. In algebra and arithmetic Messrs. Black have Dr. Chrystal's 'Introduction to Algebra'; 'The New Science and Art of Arithmetic,' by A. Sonnenschein and H. A. Nisbett, which was highly praised by the Spectator. The same authors give us 'The A.B.C.' of arithmetic, and in conjunction with Mr. A. Kahn promise a 'Commercial Arithmetic.' Another promised work is an 'Introduction to the Study of Physics,' by A. F. Walden, M.A., and J. J. Manley. Among the series of school works published by this firm are 'Black's School Shakespeare,' 'Black's Sir Walter Scott Readers,' 'Black's Sea-Dog Readers' (Drake, Blake, Hawke), 'Black's Short Histories,' including 'The English People in the Nineteenth Century,' 'English History Illustrated from Original Sources,' 'History in Biography,' &c. &c., 'Black's Historical French Readers,' 'Historical Latin Readers,' and their 'Classical' series, show the wide range covered by the educational publications of this enterprising house, which range from A to Z, including Professor Ray Lankester's 'Treatise on Zoology.'

Messrs. Wm. Blackwood & Sons have nearly ready two new volumes in 'Blackwood's English Classics,' viz. 'Pope,' select poems, edited by G. Soutar, and Hazlitt's 'Essays on Poetry,' edited by D. Nichol Smith, M.A.; seven volumes have already appeared in this most useful series. Blackwoods' 'Universal Writing Books' have been designed to accompany their 'Simplex Civil Service Copy Books' in a series of six. Seven volumes have also appeared in Messrs. Blackwood's 'Illustrated Classical Texts,' viz. 'Cæsar, Gallic War, Books IV., V.,' by St. J. B. Wyne Willson, M.A., Rugby; 'Virgil, Georgics, Book IV.,' by J. Sargeant, M.A., Westminster; 'Cicero, In Catilinam,' Books I.-IV., by H. W. Auden, M.A., Fettes College; 'Ovid, Metamorphoses (Selections),' by J. H. Vince, M.A., Bradfield; 'Demosthenes, Olynthiacs I.-III.,' by H. Sharpley, M.A., Hereford; 'Homer, Odyssey,' Book VI., by E. E. Sikes, M.A., St. John's College, Cambridge; 'Xenophon, Anabasis, Books I., II.,' by A. Jagger, B.A., Hymer's College, Hull.

The Cambridge University Press.—Messrs C. J. Clay & Sons send us the following particulars of their new educational publications. Three new volumes in the 'Cambridge Historical Series,' the aim of which is to sketch the history of Modern Europe, with that of the chief colonies and conquests, from about the end of the fifteenth century to the present time. The new volumes, with maps, just published are: 'An Essay on Western Civilisation in its Economic Aspects (Mediæval and Modern Times),' by W. Cunningham, D.D.; 'The French Monarchy, 1483-1789,' by A. J. Grant, M.A., 2 vols.; and 'Canada under British Rule, 1760-1900,' by Sir J. G. Bourinot, LL.D., K.C.M.G. The Cambridge University Press is arranging for the publication of a series of Science Primers. The first volume of this series, a book on Astronomy, has been written by Sir Robert Ball, the Lowndean Professor of Astronomy and Geometry and the Director of the Cambridge Observatory. A general view of the subject is given, and the book will be found both interesting to the ordinary reader and valuable, as a first introduction to the subject, to the student. It has 11 full-page plates, and diagrams in the text. 'The Outlines of the Growth of the British Empire,' by Professor Woodward, of University College, Liverpool, based upon the same author's 'History of the Expansion of the British Empire,' will be published at an early date, with maps and tables. This work has been prepared specially in view of the needs of candidates for Queen's Scholarships. Twenty-one volumes have already appeared in the 'Cambridge Historical' series. The new volume of the 'Pitt Press Shakespeare for Schools' is 'King Henry V,' edited by A. W. Verity, M.A. Recent volumes in the 'Pitt Press' series are: 'Der Scheik von Alessandria und seine Sklaven,' von Wilhelm Hauff, edited, with notes and vocabulary, by Walter Rippmann, M.A., Professor of German at Queen's College, London; and 'Le Chien du Capitaine,' par Louis Enault, edited, with notes and vocabulary, by Margaret de G. Verrall, of Newnham College, Cambridge. 'Fifteen Studies in Book-Keeping,' with a selection of Worked and Unworked Examination Papers, by Walter W. Snailum. This book has been written to combine a thorough explanation of the principles of double-entry book-keeping with a course of work suitable for preparation for the examinations held by the Society of Arts, Civil Service, Lancashire and Cheshire Union of Institutes, and kindred examining bodies. 'The Elements of Hydrostatics,' by S. L. Loney, M.A.: this volume is intended to be for the use of the class of students for whom the same author's 'Elements of Statics and Dynamics' was written, and may be regarded as a continuation of that book.

Among Messrs. Cassell & Co.'s new educational works may be mentioned an entirely new series of Readers, entitled 'Cassell's Eyes and no Eyes,' by Arabella Buckley, in six books, each containing eight coloured plates and numerous illustrations. The mistake which is so often made of issuing books above the comprehension of children has been most carefully avoided. Every subject is expressed in language which the children can clearly understand. A series of the most delightful lessons on country objects has thus been presented which, though specially prepared for children in the country, will be almost equally acceptable in suburban districts of our large cities. The illustrations are a special feature of the books; no trouble or expense has been spared to secure excellent original drawings, and the coloured plates are executed in the best style. A new poetry book, entitled 'The Troubadour,' selections from English verse, edited and annotated by Philip Gibbs: the poetry in this book has been selected with a view to being specially suitable for dramatic recitation; each piece is a gem in itself, having been selected from famous poets. The editor believes that noble poetry learnt by heart is one of the best cures for the cockneyism and slovenly pronunciation of the present day. 'Practical Methods of Teaching Geography,' England and Wales, Part II., by J. H. Overton, deals with Agricultural Industries, Seaports, Sectional Maps, and the Continental Connections with the British Isles. The other two books in this series have received a good welcome from teachers, no pupil after having gone through twenty-two maps can fail to have a knowledge of his subject. 'Cassell's Lessons in French,' by James Boilelle: the sale of this work has reached 145,000 copies in its original edition; it contains the recent decree of the French Minister of Public Instruction respecting the simplification of the teaching of French syntax. 'R.H.S. Curves': under this title Messrs. Cassell & Co. will shortly publish Reversible Homogeneous Scaled Curve Templates, by Professor R. H. Smith. The remarkable superiority of these curve templates as helps in artistic and technical drawings, and in physical diagrams, over the hitherto commonly used 'French curves,' 'slip curves,' and splines, results mainly from their strictly scientific and yet simple design, which gives them their peculiar characteristic of homogeneity, or oneness of shape throughout each template. They have also issued prize editions of 'Our Great City' and 'A History of England,' both by H. O. Arnold-Forster, M.A. 'Cassell's French Dictionary' has reached 595,000 copies, 'Cassell's German Dictionary' 257,000, and 'Cassell's Latin Dictionary' 122,000.

Messrs. Chapman & Hall, Ltd., are publishing a new cheap series of Original Stories for use as School Readers. The first two are 'Stories about King Alfred,' by A. H. Wall; and 'Pulabab; or, the Bravery of a Boy,' by G. Manville Fenn. A volume by Mr. G. A. Henty is promised in February. Among the more important of Messrs. Chapman & Hall's Art and Science publications may be mentioned: 'Figure Drawing and Composition,' by Richard G. Hutton, with 500 diagrams; 'Decorative Design,' by Frank G. Jackson, fully illustrated, 3rd edition; 'Wood Carving in Theory and Practice,' as applied to Home Arts, with Notes on Design, having special application to carved wood in different styles, by F. L. Schauer mann, with 124 illustrations, 2nd edition; 'Elementary Art Teaching,' by E. R. Taylor, Birmingham Municipal School of Art, with over 600 diagrams and illustrations, 2nd edition; 'The New Education—Woodwork, a Text-book of Manual Instruction, with Descriptive Lessons on Wood, Tools, and Benchwork,' by Richard Wake, with 260 illustrations; 'The Characteristics of Styles,' an Introduction to the Study of the History of Ornamental Art, by R. N. Wornum, new edition, fully illustrated; 'A Text-book of Mechanical Engineering,' by Wilfrid J. Lineham, M.I.Mech.E., 3rd edition, re-written and greatly enlarged; 'Physics: Experimental and Theoretical,' by H. R. Jude, D.Sc. M.A.; Harbutt's 'Plastic Method'; 'Plaster Casts,' a catalogue containing over 350 photographic illustrations of casts. All interested in modelling should note that Messrs. Chapman & Hall supply a material called 'Plasticine,' which is said to be far superior to clay for Kindergarten work, modelling, &c. Plasticine sells at 1s. 4d. per lb.

Among the new or forthcoming School Editions in the Clarendon Press Series are:—'Thucydides,' Book III., edited by H. F. Fox, M.A.; 'Euripides, Hecuba,' edited by C. B. Heberden, M.A., Principal of Brasenose College, Oxford; 'A Concise French Grammar,' including Phonology, Accidence, and Syntax, with Historical Notes for use in Upper and Middle Forms, by Arthur H. Wall, M.A., Assistant Master in Marlborough College; 'Historical Primer of French Phonetics and Inflection,' by Margaret S. Brittain, M.A., French Lecturer in Victoria College, Belfast, with introductory note by Paget Toynbee, M.A.; 'Demosthenes, the Speech against Meidias,' with introduction and notes by the Rev. J. R. King, M.A.; 'Lessing, Nathan der Weise,' 3rd revised edition, edited by C. A. Buchheim, Phil. Doc.; Marlowe's 'Tragical History of Dr. Faustus,' and Greene's 'Honourable History of Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay,' edited by A. W. Ward, Litt.D., fourth edition, revised and enlarged. The following four volumes of Oxford Classical Texts will appear this month: 'Thucydidis Historiae, Tom. II.,' by H. Stuart-Jones, M.A.; 'Caesaris Commentarii de Bello Civili,' by R. L. Du Pontet, M.A.; 'Ciceronis Orationes Caesarianae et Philippicae,' by Albert C. Clark, M.A.; 'Horati Flacci Opera,' by E. C. Wickham, D.D.

Dr. Cornwell's School Books.—So well known are the school books connected with Dr. Cornwell's name that it has long been a household word throughout the empire. We are glad to know that, in spite of his great age, the Doctor is in good health. It must be very satisfactory to him to find that, in spite of the greatly increased competition, new editions of his geographies, grammars, arithmetics, &c., are constantly being called for.

Messrs. Dean & Son, Ltd., 160A Fleet Street, make a feature of 'Books for Elocutionists,' also, 'Plays for Young Actors,' which will be found very useful indeed for school entertainments as well as for home performance.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. are publishing a new penny monthly, entitled Dent's School Newspaper, edited by M. T. Yates, LL.D.; it is designed to assist Teachers in providing their pupils with well-illustrated reading-matter of an interesting up-to-date nature. Among Messrs. Dent's educational publications may be mentioned: 'Dent's Modern Language Series,' edited by Walter Rippmann, M.A., including 'Dent's School Grammar of Modern French,' by G. H. Clarke, M.A., and C. J. Murray, B.A.; 'Dent's First French Book,' by S. Alge and Walter Rippmann, 4th edition; 'Dent's Second French Book,' by S. Alge and Walter Rippmann; 'Une Joyeuse Nichee' (A Merry Houseful), by M^{me}. E. de Pressensé, edited by S. Alge, illustrated by C. E. Brook; 'Hints on Teaching French'; 'French Daily Life: Common Words and Common Things'; 'Three Short Plays by Souvestre,' edited by Marguerite Ninet. An easy reading-book suitable for both girls and boys, furnished with Explanatory Notes (in the French language) of any difficulties which the text may present; 'Outlines of French Historical Grammar,' by A. T. Baker, M.A. Ph.D.; 'Dent's First German Book,' the new edition of Alge's 'Leitfaden,' by S. Alge, S. Hamburger, and W. Rippmann, 3rd edition; 'Dent's German Reader,' by S. Alge and Walter Rippmann, suitable for pupils in their second or third year of German, with Exercises and a full Glossary; 'Hints on Teaching German'; 'German Daily Life,' by Dr. Kron; 'Elements of Phonetics: English, French, and German,' translated and adapted by Walter Rippmann. 'Dent's School Series,' edited by M. T. Yates, LL.D., including 'The Temple Literary Readers.' These fully illustrated books provide a course of reading lessons, consisting largely of some of the most interesting and noteworthy literary matter in the English language suitable for this purpose; the 'Temple Nature Readers' which are intended to assist teachers in giving Object Lessons on Geography and Common Things; the 'Temple Girls' Readers,' specially prepared for use in girls' schools, with 16 beautiful coloured pictures in each book; and 'Dent's Continuous Readers,' also beautifully illustrated. This series provides a number of 'Complete and Continuous Books,' which the Code now requires as supplementary to the regular Readers used in the upper classes. They are arranged in chapters and paragraphs for class reading.

Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—Among Messrs. Duckworth's recent publications may be mentioned: 'Essays on Dante,' by Dr. Karl Witte. Selected, translated and edited, with introduction, notes, and appendices, by C. Mabel Lawrence, B.A., and Philip H. Wicksteed, M.A., with a map of Florence; 'Jean Jacques Rousseau and the Cosmopolitan Spirit in Literature,' a study of the Literary Relations between France and England in the Eighteenth Century, by Dr. Joseph Texte, authorised translation by J. W. Matthews; 'Introduction to Historical Studies,' by Ch. V. Langlois and Ch. Seignobos, of the Sorbonne, Paris, authorised translation by G. G. Berry, with a preface by Prof. York Powell; 'The Poems of Catullus,' edited by Hugh Macnaghten and A. B. Ramsay, assistant masters at Eton College; 'The Story of Catullus,' with translations of several of the Poems, by Hugh Macnaghten, formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, assistant master at Eton College;

The Educational Press, Limited, 31 Dublin Street, Edinburgh, publish the School Magazine (price 1d. monthly). It contains extracts from current literature, Examination Papers in English, History, Geography, &c., and is edited by Mr. David Campbell. The magazine is suited for the middle forms of secondary schools and the higher classes in elementary schools.

Messrs. Gay & Bird.—The books in the charming little series called 'The Bibelots' will make their way wherever they are seen, and one will recommend another. Already the series contains the following eleven booklets: Coleridge's 'Table Talk'; Herrick's 'Women, Love, and Flowers'; Leigh Hunt's 'The World of Books'; Gay's 'Trivia, and other Poems'; Marcus Aurelius' 'Meditations'; Keats' 'Shorter Poems'; 'Sydney Smith—His Wit and Wisdom'; 'An Elizabethan Garland'; Dr. Johnson's 'Table Talk'; 'Shakespeare's Sonnets'; and 'Pepys, a Selection.' In size the 'Bibelots' are $5 \times 2\frac{1}{2}$ inches, they have photogravure frontispieces, are dainty specimens of printing and binding, the binding being in embossed leather, gilt edges. In a pretty leather case, three together, make the most acceptable of presents. Messrs. Gay & Bird have also published in even smaller size ($4\frac{1}{2} \times 3$) 'The Book of Job,' of which Pope said, 'The whole book of Job, with regard both to sublimity of thought and morality, exceeds beyond all comparison the most noble parts of Homer.'

Messrs. H. Grevel & Co., of 33 King Street, Covent Garden, have just published 'An Introduction to Modern Scientific Chemistry,' popular lectures suited for University Extension students and general readers, by Dr. Lassar-Cohn, translated from the second German edition by M. M. Pattison Muir, M.A., with 58 illustrations by the author; 'Chemistry in Daily Life,' twelve popular lectures, by Dr. Lassar-Cohn, translated into English by M. M. Pattison Muir, M.A., with 21 illustrations, second edition, revised and augmented; and 'The Elements of Electro-Chemistry Treated Experimentally,' by Dr. Robert Lüpke, with 54 figures in the text, translated from the second edition, revised and enlarged, by M. M. Pattison Muir, M.A.

Mr. Francis Hodgson, 89 Farringdon Street. In his Preface to 'Schilling's Spanish Grammar' Mr. F. Zagel, the translator and editor, says: 'El buen paño en el arca se vende, says a Spanish proverb—meaning "Good cloth sells in the box," that is to say, without advertising. Such a claim may well be made on behalf of Professor Schilling's Spanish Grammar, a work which I now publish in a form adapted to the use of English students. I have been prompted to do so by the success that has already attended the French and Italian translations of the same work, as well as by the equally important fact that in German-speaking countries the original work has reached in a few years its twelfth edition.' In the preparation of this work, it has been the author's constant endeavour to make the student acquainted with the Spanish spirit and mode of thought, and at the same time to reproduce current popular language in all the exercises. In doing this, he has kept two aims in view—viz. to break the monotony of grammatical rules, and to maintain the student's interest throughout, while paying due regard both to commercial and to social aspects. Other books in Mr. Hodgson's list which may be mentioned are: 'Modern Side Arithmetic: Examples,' by the Rev. T. Mitcheson, B.A., 7th edition; 'Examples in Algebra,' by the Rev. T. Mitcheson, B.A.; 'The Hamiltonian System,' or a Short and Easy Method of Learning a Foreign Language by a Close Interlinear Translation; a 13th edition of 'Plane Trigonometry and Logarithms,' an Introductory Course, by John Walmsley, B.A.; 'Plane Trigonometry and Logarithms,' for schools and colleges, by John Walmsley, B.A.; 'An Introduction to Geometry,' consisting of Euclid's Elements, Book I., with numerous Explanations, Questions, and Exercises, by John Walmsley, B.A.; 'The Children: How to Study Them,' by Francis Warner, M.D., 2nd edition; 'First Lessons in Drawing and Design,' by George Carpenter, in 12 numbers, interleaved with tissue paper.

Mr. A. M. Holden, of 11 Paternoster Square, announces the 135th thousand of Professor Meiklejohn's 'New Geography on the Comparative Method.' Comparatively few school books at 4s. 6d. have attained such a circulation as this. A work of great value is 'The Principles and Practice of Teaching and Class Management,' by Joseph Landon, F.G.S., Vice-Principal in the Salford Training College, now in its fourth edition. A book of the day is 'The Building of the British Empire (1497-1900),' with notes on the Growth of Constitutional Government in the Colonies, Imperial Federation, Statistical Tables, Etymology of Colonial Names, Biographies of Empire Builders, and five double-page maps in colours, by Arthur T. Flux. In Professor Meiklejohn's series there is another work on 'The British Empire, its Geography, Resources, Commerce, Landways, and Waterways,' and the series includes standard works on Arithmetic, Algebra, Geography, 'The English Language, English History,' &c. Probably one of the best manuals on the subject is 'The English Language: its Grammar, History, and Literature,' by Professor Meiklejohn, now in its nineteenth edition. Judging from articles and correspondence in the American journal, the Nation, there has been a great outcry in the United States at the alleged neglect of the study of English in American schools and colleges. If this is so there ought to be a large field there for many of the works published by Mr. A. M. Holden.

Messrs. Crosby Lockwood & Son have published a new edition, revised, and brought down to date, of their 'Handbook of English Literature,' originally compiled by Mr. Austin Dobson, the revision and extension being done by Mr. W. Hall Griffin, B.A., Professor of English Language and Literature at Queen's College, London. This admirable handbook now extends to over 400 pages. The same firm publish a fifty-fourth edition of Dr. V. de Fivas's 'Grammar of French Grammars'; the same author's other French School Books have also a very large sale. In these days, when commercial competition between the nations is so keen, we are always glad to see works connected with business intended for use by English scholars and students, works with which their future Continental competitors are well provided. In this connection Messrs. Lockwoods have two most useful books: 'Lessons in Commerce,' a text-book for students, by Professor R. Gambaro, revised by Professor James Gault, and 'The Foreign Commercial Correspondent,' English, French, German, Italian, and Spanish, by C. E. Baker. The same firm's 'Civil Service Handbooks' admirably serve their purpose, viz. the 'Civil Service History of England,' by F. A. White, B.A., revised by H. A. Dobson, 8th edition;

'Civil Service Coach,' by Stanley Savill; 'Civil Service Essay Writer,' by H. Skipton; 'Civil Service Précis Book,' by W. Cosmo Monkhouse, 5th edition; and 'Civil Service Geography,' by L. M. D. Spence, revised by the late Thomas Gray, C.B., 10th edition, revised.

Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. announce for publication this month 'Education and Life,' by J. H. Baker; 'Longmans' Complete Course of Needlework, Knitting, and Cutting,' by Miss T. M. James, with 444 illustrations; 'A Reading Book in Irish History,' by P. W. Joyce, LL.D.; and 'The Animal Story-Book Reader,' edited by Andrew Lang. Among their recent publications of an educational nature may be mentioned a new and revised edition of 'A History of England,' by F. York Powell, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, Oxford, and T. F. Tout, M.A. The work is brought down to the occupation of Pretoria by Lord Roberts, June 1900. 'The Fourth Latin Prose Book,' by E. C. Cumberbatch, M.A. The book contains seventy-five miscellaneous exercises in Latin prose suitable for fourth form boys. 'Preliminary Practical Magnetism and Electricity, a Text-book for Organised Science Schools and Elementary Evening Science Classes,' by John Henderson, D.Sc.; 'Elementary Questions in Electricity and Magnetism,' compiled by Magnus Maclean, D.Sc., and E. W. Marchant, D.Sc. The book is intended to serve as a set of exercises on a course of lectures given to a class of first year or elementary students. The questions cover a large field of investigation. 'Exercises in Natural Philosophy, with Indications how to Answer Them,' by Magnus Maclean, D.Sc. Longmans' British Classics: 'Macaulay's Essay on Clive,' with a general introduction to the study of Macaulay and an essay on Literary Characteristics, edited and annotated by A. M. Williams, M.A., with 8 illustrations and a map. Volumes in preparation: 'William Pitt,' edited by the Rev. H. Wesley Dennis, M.A.; 'The Earl of Chatham,' edited by H. L. Withers, M.A.; 'Addison,' edited by A. Burrell, M.A. 'Exercises on the French Irregular Verbs,' by Maurice Guichard. In this book the exercises are so arranged that each contains as many parts as possible of a given verb, and in this way it is hoped that the student may gain a thorough acquaintance with its various forms, and so avoid the disadvantages of passing reference. Longmans' Practical Elementary Science Series: 'Practical Mathematics,' by A. G. Cracknell, M.A., B.Sc., with answers to the examples. The object of this book is to develop in the student a clear and accurate conception of the more useful principles of elementary mathematics. Chemistry: 'Practical Chemistry' (three parts), by M. M. Pattison Muir, Parts I. and II.; 'Chemical Analysis,' by G. S. Newth. Commercial Instruction: 'Longmans' Studies and Questions in Bookkeeping,' by A. Nixon; 'Longmans' Worked Studies and Questions in Bookkeeping,' by A. Nixon; 'First Guides to Commercial Education,' by J. A. Jenkins. English Language and Literature: 'Longmans' Advanced Reader'; 'The Swan Shakespeare,' 'A First Form Grammar,' by M. Morgan-Brown. French—Episodes from Modern French Authors: 'Les Deux Rois,' par A. Dumas, edited by F. H. Hewitt; 'Histoires d'Animaux,' edited by T. H. Bertenshaw; 'Longmans' Illustrated First Conversational French Reader,' by T. H. Bertenshaw; 'Longmans' Elementary French Unseen,' by T. H. Bertenshaw; 'Longmans' French Course'; 'Selections from the Mémoires du Général Baron de Marbot,' with notes by Granville Sharp. Geography and Physiography: 'Longmans' Geographical Series'; 'Longmans' Pictorial Geographical Readers'; 'Object Lessons in Geography,' by T. F. G. Dexter

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd. Mr. F. F. Lydon, Art Master, Parmiter's School, has just brought out two new works on blackboard and ambidextrous drawing to meet the requirements of the Board of Education. The work on 'Model and Blackboard Drawing' consists of forty-four plates, which divide themselves into three classes, dealing respectively with the geometric models proper, common objects based on them, and blackboard exercises, treated boldly, and reproduced white on black. There are fifty-two pages of descriptive letterpress, in which the usual difficulties of the student are fully dealt with. 'Ambidextrous and Free-Arm Blackboard Drawing and Design': this work, in addition to a fully-illustrated description of the forty-eight graduated plates, which are designed as a progressive course in free-arm drawing and design, gives numerous photographic blocks and diagrams illustrative of the method of work described, and of the best ways to fit up the class-room for the study of this subject. The letterpress shows how the subject may be inexpensively introduced into any school and made an accessory to the ordinary drawing lesson. The forty-eight exercises, which begin with the simplest curves and work up to examples of floral design, are also issued as four packets of drawing cards suitable for class teaching. All the copies, as befits the subject, are effectively reproduced white on a black background to represent actual blackboard drawing. In view of the lectures which Mr. J. Liberty Tadd is giving throughout the country on Art, Real Manual Training, Nature Study, this author's work on 'New Methods in Education' will receive a fresh impetus. Mr. Tadd contends that the hand is the instrument of instruments, and that the hand and eye should be trained to work in automatic response to the brain. The old education is dependent too much upon books; they are mere aids; nature and experience will be found the best teachers.

A new edition of James Connor's 'Conversation Book in French, German, and English' has just been issued by Julius Groos, of Heidelberg, for whom Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston, & Co. are the agents in this country. The conversations, the model phrases, in short, everything in this book are well selected and suitably applied. The translations in the three languages are idiomatic.

Mr. John Jackson's 'German Copy Book' is almost ready, and will be published immediately. It is a graded writing-book for the use of English pupils and students who learn German. The exercises proceed from the simplest outlines and combinations to the most complex and together form a complete course of instruction in German handwriting. Such an aid to the rapid acquisition of this style of calligraphy should prove most useful in our secondary schools.

The 'Grooved Tablets,' by the same author, constitute a most entertaining and valuable 'Varied Occupation' for Infant Schools, which teachers pronounce to be intensely fascinating to their juvenile charges. These Tablets combine interesting work for the two hands, both singly and simultaneously, and helpful exercises in the elements of handwriting, to which indeed they form the most efficient and successful introduction that has yet been devised.

A work that should be seen by every headmaster who makes drawing a subject, is 'The Jackson Drawing Album,' which contains over 40 original drawing copies after modern Italian masters, in addition to drawing copies in the following subjects: Landscape, Ornament, Animals, Birds, and Human Figure. Opposite each copy a sheet of specially-made drawing paper is inserted for the pupil to work on. It is eminently suitable for school and home teaching.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—Among Messrs. Macmillan's recent publications of an educational nature may be mentioned:—'School Management and Methods of Instruction with Special Reference to Elementary Schools,' by George Collar, B.A., B.Sc., and Charles W. Crook, B.A., B.Sc.; 'Algebra for Elementary Schools,' by H. S. Hall, M.A., joint author of Hall and Knight's 'Elementary Algebra' and Hall and Stevens' 'Euclid,' and R. J. Wood, B.A., headmaster of Monnow Road Higher Grade Board School, Bermondsey, in 2 parts; 'A Second Manual of Composition,' designed for use in Secondary Schools, by Professor Edwin Herbert Lewis, Ph.D.; 'Macmillan's German Idioms,' a selection of German Idioms, prepared and translated by Myra Taker, under the direction of F. F. Roget, late Lecturer in the University of St. Andrews. This 'Selection of German Idioms' differs from the similar volume, 'Macmillan's French Idioms,' in that the French idioms are explained by easy renderings in French, whereas the German are rendered in English. But the renderings give not merely an equivalent but an explanation, and idioms are classified according as they are merely figurative, figurative and colloquial, figurative and familiar, or figurative and slangy. In the 'Elementary Classics' series, 'Cornelius Nepos: Lives of Miltiades and Epaminondas,' edited with introduction, notes, vocabulary, and map, by G. H. Nall, M.A., Assistant Master at Westminster School. In the 'Classical' series, 'Selections from Plato,' with introduction and notes, by Lewis Leaning Forman, Ph.D., Instructor in Greek in Cornell University. 'Botany,' an elementary text-book for schools, by L. H. Bailey, with numerous illustrations; 'Applied Mechanics,' an elementary general introduction to the theory of structures and machines, with diagrams, illustrations, and examples, by James H. Cotterill, F.R.S., fifth edition, revised, and enlarged; 'The Cambridge Natural History,' Vol. VIII., Amphibia and Reptiles, by H. Gadow, M.A., F.R.S.; 'The Scientific Memoirs of Thomas Henry Huxley,' edited by Sir M. Foster, K.C.B., F.R.S., and Professor E. Ray Lankester, F.R.S., in 4 vols., Vol. III. 'This book is the embodiment of a series of notes which the author had written for his own use when lecturing on this subject. He has now so arranged them that by the help of copious illustrative examples and diagrams taken from common objects, the student may be able to master the fundamental principles upon which a knowledge of mechanics and hydrostatics is based. In order that those who have not hitherto acquired much knowledge of mathematics may have some tools to work with, Mr. Hancock has explained the method of measuring angles, and the geometrical meanings of the terms used in plane trigonometry; and throughout the book he has described each portion of this subject in so simple a manner that there should be no difficulty in obtaining a very useful knowledge of these sciences. The author has attached to each chapter a large number of questions, the answers to which are given at the end of the book. Many of these questions are taken from the matriculation examinations of the University of London, and those of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and exemplify the kind of problems generally set by examiners.'—BUILDER.

'A text-book which is well devised to make the student think for himself, the best training he can possibly have.'—ENGLISH MECHANIC.

ZOOLOGY.—TEXT-BOOK OF ZOOLOGY. By Dr. J. E. V. BOAS, Lecturer in Zoology in the Royal College of Agriculture, Copenhagen. Translated by J. W. KIRKALDY, Tutor in Natural Science to the Association for the Education of Women, Oxford, and E. C. POLLARD, B.Sc. Lond., Assistant Lecturer in Biology, University Extension College, Reading. Illustrated with 427 Figures. 1 vol. royal 8vo. cloth extra, 21s. net.

Dr. Boas's Text-book has passed through two Danish and two German editions; the present translation is from the second German edition, with certain alterations by the author, who has revised the proofs. The lists of animals occurring in Germany, which were given in connection with the descriptions of the several groups, have been replaced by references to the fauna of the British Isles. Intended in the first instance as a text-book for those beginning the study of Zoology, the book is so planned as to make it valuable to students of Medicine, of Veterinary Surgery, of Forestry, and of Agriculture also.

same. 'Source-Book of English History,' for use of Schools and Readers, edited by Elizabeth Kimball Kendall, M.A.

Mr. John Murray.—Mr. Murray's list of new or forthcoming books of an educational nature include 'The Growth of Greater Britain,' a reader for schools, compiled and edited by Elizabeth Lee; this school reader is conceived on novel lines, the extracts are arranged in sections, comprising 'The English Colonies up to 1800,' 'Australia,' 'India,' 'South Africa,' &c., and the story of these periods of British history is told by the actual explorers, navigators, colonists, and statesmen who were instrumental in the expansion of England at the time. The next two volumes in 'The Progressive Science Series' will be 'The Comparative Physiology of the Brain and Comparative Psychology,' by Professor Jacques Loeb, M.D.; and 'Heredit,' by J. Arthur Thomson. The new volume (No. 7) in 'Murray's Handy Classical Maps' is 'Graecia'—Northern Greece and Southern Greece and the Peloponnesus. 'The Student's Gibbon,' abridged from the original work by Sir William Smith, D.C.L., LL.D., a new and revised edition in two parts. A new edition is nearly ready of 'The Student's History of Rome,' by H. G. Liddell, D.D., revised and in part rewritten by P. V. M. Benecke, M.A., with coloured and other maps and numerous illustrations; and of 'The Student's Manual of English Literature,' thoroughly revised and in great part rewritten by A. Hamilton Thompson. Mr. Murray has in the press 'Little Arthur's History of Greece,' a companion volume to 'Little Arthur's England' and 'Little Arthur's France,' by the Rev. A. S. Walpole, M.A., with maps and illustrations. Formed on the plan of the famous 'Principia Latina,' Mr. Murray has in the press a 'Spanish Principia,' Part I: a first Spanish course, containing grammar, exercises, vocabularies, and materials for conversation, by Don Fernando de Arteaga, Taylorian Teacher of Spanish in the University of Oxford; also a new 'Greek Grammar for Schools,' by John Thompson, M.A.; one of the chief objects of this book is to bring within the reach of the younger generation of students and schoolboys some of the results of the linguistic discoveries of the present day. 'The Public School Speaker,' compiled by F. Warre Cornish, M.A., Vice-Provost of Eton College; this new work, as its name implies, is a collection of pieces suitable for recitation at school 'speeches.' A new French Grammar is 'The Technical School French Grammar,' by Dr. W. Krisch. An entirely new and cheaper edition is ready of Murray's 'Greek Testament Reader,' for use in schools, comprising consecutive extracts from the Synoptic Gospels and passages from the Epistles of St. Paul, by Theophilus D. Hall, M.A.; and 'Chapters from Aristotle's Ethics,' by J. H. Muirhead, M.A. has recently been published, and will be of great assistance to all students of Aristotle.

Messrs. T. Nelson & Sons.—Messrs. T. Nelson & Sons are publishing an entirely new series of literary reading books, specially adapted to girls' and mixed schools: 'The Royal Princess Readers.' The lessons are carefully selected, graduated, and edited. The illustrations are the work of well-known artists: many coloured pictures, beautifully reproduced by the three-colour process, adorn each book. The type is beautifully clear. No pains have been spared to make 'The Royal Princess Readers' among the most attractive yet published. Books 1 to 4 are ready; Books 5 and 6 are in active preparation. We have never seen more charmingly illustrated books of the kind. 'The Royal Crown Readers,' with coloured illustrations, an entirely new series of General Readers, new lessons, new type, new poetry, new pictures, with notes and meanings, word lessons, grammar exercises, vocabularies, &c.; 'The Royal Science Readers,' a graded series of object lessons, exactly meeting the requirements of the 'New Code, each beautifully illustrated, and containing poetry for recitations, summaries, word lists, exercises, &c.; 'Nelson's Supplementary Infant Readers,' just published, No. 2, 'Over the Hills and Far Away,' a continuous Story Reader for the 'Sixes,' with four coloured and many other illustrations, printed in large clear type, strongly bound, cloth; 'Nelson's Supplementary Readers,' providing a wide range and variety of good reading, with illustrations; in geography, 'The Royal Osborne Geography Readers,' brightly written and carefully graduated, with spelling lists, summaries, notes and meanings, and beautiful illustrations, Book 4 (for Standard IV.) 'Sea and Land,' Book 5 (for Standard V.) 'Great Britain and Ireland,' Book 6 (for Standards VI. and VII.) 'The British Empire, its Geography and Commerce,' coloured maps, 384 pages; in history, 'The Royal Windsor History Readers,' Book 4 (for Standard IV.) 'Stories and Biographies from British History, 55 B.C. to 1603 A.D.,' Book 5 (for Standard V.) 'Stories and Biographies from 1603 to the Present Time,' Book 6 (for Standards VI. and VII.) 'The Reign of Queen Victoria—Growth of the Empire.' Recent additions to Messrs. Nelson's list are:—'A Little History of the West of England' (comprising the Counties of Cornwall, Devon, Somerset, Gloucester, Wilts, and Dorset), uniform with 'A Little History of Lancashire' and 'A Little History of Yorkshire,' with numerous illustrations; 'Nelson's Metric Arithmetics,' by G. Christian, B.A., and A. H. Baker, B.A., three books providing a complete course, simple, graduated, and scientific, Book 1 for Standards III. and IV., Book 2 for Standard V., Book 3 for Standards VI. and VII.; 'Nelson's New Drawing Course,' by J. Vaughan, Art Master, London School Board, the only scheme published for co-ordinating the ordinary forms of manual occupations with freehand, free-arm, ruler drawing, and design; each set consists of ten strong Manilla paper sheets printed on both sides, one side outline, the other in colour, Set 1 is now ready, size of sheets, 20 by 27 inches, mounted on roller to turn over, in strong cloth portfolio.

Mr. David Nutt.—Among recent educational works published by Mr. David Nutt may be mentioned Mr. Henley's admirable 'Lyra Heroica,' the finest collection of heroic and patriotic verse in the English language. A 14th edition has been published of the 'Wellington College French Grammar.' As a supplement to that standard work Mr. Nutt has just published a 'Simplification of French Syntax,' by the same authors, Messrs. Eve and De Baudiss. A 3rd edition has just been published of 'French Proverbs and Idioms,' by De V. Payen-Payne; and the companion work, 'A Dictionary of Difficulties met with in Reading, Writing, Translating, and Speaking French,' by Marius Deshumbert, is already in a 6th edition. 'English Composition, a Manual of Theory and Practice,' by L. Cope-Cornford, is most highly spoken of by the educational journals. 'The Frog, an Introduction to Anatomy, History, and Embryology,' by the late Professor A. Milnes Marshall, revised by G. Herbert Fowler, Assistant-Professor of Zoology, University College, London, is in a seventh edition. An exceedingly interesting introduction to British history is 'Life in Early Britain,' being an account of the inhabitants of this island and the memorials they have left behind them, by Bertram Windle, D.Sc., M.D. It is profusely illustrated, and deals with a subject which is very inadequately dealt with in general school histories.

Messrs. Scott, Greenwood, & Co. have also just published 'A Practical Treatise on the Bleaching of Linen and Cotton Yarn and Fabrics,' by L. Tailfer, Chemical and Mechanical Engineer, translated from the French by John Geddes McIntosh, Lecturer on Chemical Technology, London.

Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co. are the publishers of the Standard Educational Works edited by Dr. William Davis. The list now contains seventeen books, many of which have had an immense sale, such as:—'Arithmetical Examples,' part I., containing thousands of new questions, from simple addition to practice, bills of parcels, fractions, proportion, &c., 510th thousand; 'The Complete English Spelling and Dictation Book,' 72nd edition; 'The First Book of English History for Schools and Families,' in question and answer, 17th edition; 'The Complete Grade Parsing and Analysis,' a book of exercises for home and school use, 30th edition; Key to 'The Complete Parsing and Analysis,' containing the full working of all the exercises, 5th edition; 'The Complete Grade Spelling Book,' containing most of the easy and difficult words in the English language, arranged in lessons for home work, 22nd edition; 'The Complete Book of Arithmetical Examples,' 132nd thousand.

Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—It would not be easy to exaggerate the value of 'Shakespeare's Life and Work,' an abridgment chiefly for the use of students of Mr. Sidney Lee's standard 'Life of William Shakespeare,' which has won unanimous praise both in this country and in America, and must be looked upon as the standard 'Life.' Specially adapted for use by pupil teachers as aids in the instruction of domestic economy are the 'Physiological Diagrams,' by the late Professor John Marshall, with life-size coloured diagrams of the anatomy of the human body; the same author's 'Description of the Human Body' is a companion work. 'An Introduction to the Study of the Renaissance,' by Mrs. Lilian F. Field; 'A Simple Grammar of English Now in Use' by John Earle, M.A.; and 'English Prose,' its elements, history, and usage, are perhaps, technically speaking, more 'educational' than Dr. Fitchett's books, but we are glad to know that the latter are very largely used in schools throughout the Empire. 'Deeds that Won the Empire' ought to be a class book in every school under our flag. It has reached a twelfth edition already. All Dr. Fitchett's books are well illustrated. A new volume of his 'How England Saved Europe,' the Story of the Great War (1793-1815), has been published, and a second edition of 'Fights for the Flag.'

Messrs. Stevens & Haynes.—A work which ought to be in great demand presently, when order is restored, is 'International Law in South Africa,' by T. Baty, published by Messrs. Stevens & Haynes, of 13 Bell Yard, Temple Bar, who also announce a fifth edition of 'English Constitutional History, from the Teutonic Invasion to the Present Time,' designed as a text-book for students and others, by T. P. Taswell-Langmead, B.C.L., revised throughout, with notes, by Philip A. Ashworth; also a second edition of 'Leading Cases in Constitutional Law,' with Introduction and Notes, by E. C. Thomas; and a second edition of 'A Collection of Latin Maxims and Phrases,' literally translated, intended for the use of students for all legal examinations, by J. N. Cotterell.

University Tutorial Press (Univ. Corr. Coll. Press).—'Algebra, The Tutorial,' Part I., Elementary Course, by Rupert Deakin, M.A. Lond. and Oxon., Headmaster of Stourbridge Grammar School (in the press); 'Arithmetic, The Tutorial,' by W. P. Workman, M.A. (in the press); 'Deductions in Euclid,' by T. W. Edmondson,

'The University Tutorial' series.—All schoolmasters who are interested in the 1901 Special Examinations (Cambridge and Oxford Local, College of Preceptors, &c.) should see the list of suitable books for use in preparing pupils for them in the announcements of the University Tutorial Press on page 69.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Messrs. E. J. Arnold & Son, Leeds.—'The Law relating to Schools and Teachers,' by T. A. Organ, B.A. Members of school boards, school attendance committees, county and borough councils, governing bodies of secondary and voluntary schools, and all who are concerned in the vast machinery of education in this country, have no doubt at times a considerable necessity for a knowledge of the law in its relation to their work; and the primary aim of Mr. Organ's volume is to afford them such information. The author writes with great knowledge of his subject, seeing that he is one of the standing counsel of the National Union of Teachers, and in this capacity has had access to a number of records and official papers. In his treatment of the question the topics mainly considered are the leading educational authorities, the formation and constitution of school boards, the income and expenditure of the same, the acquiring of school premises by school boards, the respective features of board schools and voluntary schools, the use of schoolrooms for non-educational purposes, technical instruction in England, intermediate or secondary education in Wales, industrial and reformatory schools, religious instruction, teachers' tenure of office, and school punishment. From this it will be seen that Mr. Organ travels over a wide expanse of ground, and though we may differ with him on several matters of detail, none can deny that he has produced a book of much informative value and great practical importance. As a work of reference for those interested or actually concerned in scholastic matters it should prove of the greatest assistance.

From Messrs. Blackie & Son, Limited.—'Tales of Indian Chivalry,' by Michael Macmillan, Principal of Elphinstone College, Bombay. Illustrated by Paul Hardy. (Cr. 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d.) This is a book for boys, full of fire and sword, and cries of 'Din, Din.' Rajput warriors and princesses play the leading parts in these tales of Indian chivalry; they fall violently in love with each other at sight, and generally have to go through all sorts of jolly adventures before they can get married. Boys will get a good idea of the former life and customs of some of the proud races of India from this book, which also offers them a welcome change of subject, and will show them that valour is not confined to British youth. Mr. Hardy's illustrations are good.

From T. B. Browne, Limited.—The 1901 Edition of 'The Advertiser's A.B.C.: the Standard Advertisement Press Directory,' 10s. 6d. In the compilation of the edition for 1901 of this work the publishers have adhered closely to the lines of the last issue in regard to the arrangement of the contents, which arrangement has been found in practice a very convenient one for reference purposes. The following are the principal sections:—

1. Advertisement Picture Gallery, containing specimens of pictorial advertisements.
2. Directory in Brief and Indices, which comprise (a) a general descriptive list in alphabetical order, and (b) classified lists of the periodical publications issued in the United Kingdom.
3. London Newspapers, Magazines, &c.
4. Like particulars of Provincial Newspapers and Magazines.
5. Colonial, Indian, and Foreign Press, with several specially prepared (coloured) maps, and interspersed with articles calculated to be of practical assistance to home manufacturers and traders generally.

Opportunity has been taken of the commencement of a new century to review the newspaper press of the nineteenth century, and an interesting comparative and illustrated article is inserted on the subject. Special attention may be drawn to the coloured maps of the British Empire and of Australia, India, and our principal Colonies, which have been carefully prepared and are up to date, as is evidenced by that of British South Africa. According to the editor's calculation, the number of papers and magazines which are now being published shows a substantial increase on the figures of a year ago, and are tabulated as follows:

London newspapers and periodicals (including suburban)	925
Provincial newspapers and magazines	2,350
London magazines, reviews, &c.	1,393
Total	4,668

The directory contains nearly eleven hundred pages.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Outlines of the History of the English Language,' by T. N. Toller, M.A. In an almost eloquent preface to this work the author points out that to understand the language of any people is to realise at the time of observation their inner life and characteristics. 'To follow a language completely throughout its gradual development would be to follow all phases in the changing life of those who spoke it; and only as the powers of the imagination are cultivated is progress made towards this ideal.' The latter statement is perhaps open to some objection, but of the importance of language in its bearings upon the inner life of the people there can scarcely be any question. Professor Toller has made the study of English his life-work, and there are ample evidences throughout this volume of the untiring and painstaking labour he has devoted to the subject. Few students, we believe, will read his book without being attracted to a deeper investigation of the topic; and as this is the chief aim of the work, its success should be amply assured. We would warmly recommend the volume to pupil teachers and candidates for certificates, who will find that a most interesting text-book has been prepared without in any way losing sight of the practical requirements of those for whom the manual is intended. Two other but smaller volumes in the same series—i.e. 'The Cambridge Series for Schools and Training Colleges'—are 'The Anabasis of Xenophon, Book VI.,' edited, with introduction, notes, and vocabulary, by G. M. Edwards, M.A., and 'Caesar, De Bello Gallico, Liber VII.,' edited, with notes and vocabulary for beginners, by E. S. Shuckburgh, M.A. Both these volumes are admirably prepared, and the notes in each case are concise and helpful.—Recent additions to the Cambridge Historical Series, edited by Dr. G. W. Prothero, are 'The French Monarchy (1483-1789),' in two volumes, by A. J. Grant, M.A.; 'An Essay on Western Civilisation in its Economic Aspects (Mediæval and Modern Times),' by W. Cunningham, D.D.; and 'Canada under British Rule, 1760-1900,' by Sir John G. Bourinot, K.C.M.G., LL.D. Professor Grant's work on the French Monarchy aims at giving a fair and impartial account of the chief events of French history, both domestic and foreign, between the years 1483-1789. It was first intended to compress the material into one volume, but the character of the subject and its extreme interest and importance eventually led to this compass being very wisely, as we think, extended. The author commences his work with a survey of France at the end of the fifteenth century, and from this he proceeds in the succeeding chapters to a consideration of the Italian wars, the religious situation of France and the reign of Henry II., the religious wars during the times of Charles IX. and Henry III., the position of the country under the control of Henry IV., and so to the supremely interesting times of Cardinals Richelieu and Mazarin. This, with several appendices, constitutes the first volume. In the second we enter upon the reign of Louis XIV., so famous for his amours, and closely following the events that characterised it, both in a military and religious aspect, we come to the question of the Spanish succession, the war that resulted, the Regency and the administration of Fleury, the war of the Austrian Succession, the Seven Years War, the rise of opposition to the absolute monarchy, the intellectual and social condition of France at the end of the ancien régime, and finally to the position of France during the reign of Louis XVI. It will thus be seen that a very thorough and comprehensive view of the subject is taken, and to Professor Grant's strict fairness and impartiality we can bear strong testimony. Throughout he has held the scales of justice, we think, very fairly. The work in its practical value is aided by several maps, and an excellent index to the entire production is given with the second volume. Dr. Cunningham's 'Essay on Western Civilisation in its Economic Aspects' shows with great clearness how the material progress of the human race has been carried on and affected by one great polity after another. Practically the work is a continuation of three previous text-books of the author—i.e. 'Modern Civilisation in some of its Economic Aspects,' 'Outlines of English Industrial History,' and 'Western Civilisation in its Economic Aspects'; and with the publication of the present volume the series is completed. In the three sections of which the book is mainly made up he draws attention to the foundations of society, natural and money economy, the Christian relations with heathen and Moslems, secularisation, the intervention of capital, rival commercial empires, the industrial revolution, and other branches of the subject, which he treats with great cogency and clearness of exposition. The volume forms a valuable contribution to the study of history in one of its aspects, and will advantageously widen the student's field of view. Sir John G. Bourinot commences his short but interesting history of 'Canada under British Rule' with a brief review of the colonisation of the valley of St. Lawrence by the French and of their political and social conditions at the Conquest; and in this way a reader may be able to compare their weak and impoverished state under 'the repressive dominion of France with the prosperous and influential position they eventually attained under the liberal methods of British rule.' The succeeding chapters are devoted to a consideration of the important events which have had the largest influence on the political development of the several provinces as British possessions. Under this heading come the Quebec Act, the American Revolution of the Thirteen Colonies, the development of representative institutions, the war of 1812-1815, the respective rebellions in Lower and Upper Canada, which may be said to have started the evolution of responsible government, the evolution of confederation, and Canada's relations with the United States and her influence in imperial councils. Accompanying the text are several useful plans and maps, and the book as a whole is one not only of interest but of much instructive value.—'Le Chien du Capitaine,' par Louis Enault, edited, with notes and vocabulary, by Margaret De G. Verrall, is a suitable little volume, well prepared, which has been added to the 'Pitt Press' series, and similar commendation may be awarded the edition of Gustav Freytag's 'Die Journalisten,' for which Mr. H. W. Eve, M.A., is responsible, both introduction and notes being most carefully written. In the same series we have a revival of our old friend 'Robinson Crusoe,' whose adventures have been textually supervised by Mr. J. Howard B. Masterman, M.A. A concise account of the author, with some particulars regarding the book, is supplied in the introduction, there is a summary of the book (which perhaps hardly seems necessary), and some excellent notes.—'King Henry V.,' with introduction, notes, glossary, appendix, and indexes, by A. W. Verity, M.A., forms a very suitable addition just now to the 'Pitt Press Shakespeare for Schools,' and both in the matter of introduction and notes is worthy of the highest praise.—A new series, entitled 'The Cambridge Science Primers,' is inaugurated by the publication of 'A Primer of Astronomy,' by Sir Robert Ball, LL.D., F.R.S. Professor Ball has contrived with experienced skill to make his little work exceedingly interesting and at the same time thoroughly practical, and if the succeeding volumes of the series are equal to this a large circulation should result. The volume is plentifully supplied with plates, and is in every respect worthy of the attention of junior students.—'The New Atlantis,' by Francis Bacon (Lord Verulam), edited, with introduction, notes, glossary, and an excursus of Bacon's Grammar, by G. C. Moore Smith, M.A. It may safely be said that the 'Pitt Press' series contains no more conscientiously edited volume than this, and the value of Professor Moore Smith's knowledge and painstaking labour is apparent on almost every page. The text of the 'New Atlantis' as here given is that of the first edition, with some few alterations in the matter of type and paragraphs which are not very important. The volume in its entirety can scarcely fail to be of excellent use to students.

From Mr. W. B. Clive.—'The Preceptors' Latin Reader,' by the Rev. Edward J. G. Forse, M.A. This little work, like all the publications of the University Tutorial Press, is distinguished by its great practical merit—it is evidently written by a man who is thoroughly in touch with the requirements of students, and is more bent upon helping them than showing off his own merits. The lessons are very carefully graduated, and range from mere simple sentences to passages of much more difficult translation. The book should be found of great assistance for class purposes.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Limited.—'Studies in Peerage and Family History,' by J. Horace Round, M.A. This handsome royal 8vo. volume, although it extends to over 500 pages, is printed on such pleasantly light paper that there is no undue feeling of weight. The author, Mr. Round, has already made a reputation as an authority on family history in general, and as a discoverer of family skeletons in particular. The object of this volume is to illustrate that 'new genealogy' which is of comparatively recent growth and 'to stimulate the movement for honesty and truth in peerage and family history.' Of course, such a work as this, exposing as it does the visionary grounds on which many families claim to bear arms, will be bitterly resented in many quarters. No one is very much injured by the statement that So-and-so claims descent in an unbroken male line from Belinos the Great, King of Britain, or even from Bel the Dragon; but it is a different matter when people pirate the arms of an old family who happen to possess the same name but otherwise are totally unconnected with them. The Herald's College comes in for a good deal of adverse criticism; in fact, the author plainly suggests that the object of that ancient institution is not so much to purify pedigrees as to pocket fees. But, apart from what some may call its inquisitorial character, this work contains much matter of general historical interest. The paper on 'The Counts of Boulogne as English lords' explains the devolution of some great territorial 'honours,' and throws 'what seems to be a fresh light on the acceptance by Stephen and his son of Henry II.'s succession.' The titles of other chapters will indicate its interesting nature generally: 'The Origin of the Stewarts,' 'The Origin of the Russells,' 'The Rise of the Spencers,' 'Charles I. and Lord Glamorgan.' Of our English Hapsburgs, Mr. Round says: 'Romantic in its story, unique in its splendour, the descent of the Fieldings, Earls of Denbigh, is without a rival in the English peerage,' and then he calmly proceeds to show that, in his opinion, the whole thing is a 'delusion.' The book is full of 'human documents,' and some of them would make even anglers, as storytellers, blush.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'The Human Frame and the Laws of Health,' by Drs. Rebinann and Sieler, translated from the German by F. W. Keeble, M.A. Clearness of exposition and conciseness of description give a very practical value to this little work, and there are few books in which so much valuable information is judiciously compressed into such small space. The earlier sections of the volume are devoted to a consideration of those features in connection with the human frame a knowledge of which will best advance the student to a just appreciation of the laws of health—such, for instance, as the bony structures, the muscles, the nervous system, the excretion of waste substances, the temperature of the body, and so on; while in the second half admirable information and advice are given in relation to the necessities of life, hygienic rules for special circumstances, and the care of the body. The volume, which forms one of Messrs. Dent's now well-known 'Temple Primers,' is efficiently equipped as a guide to the rudimentary facts of anatomy and physiology in regard to the conditions bearing upon a healthy life, and it need scarcely be said, considering the reputation of the firm, that it is distinguished by attributes of excellent printing and binding. It is also suitably illustrated.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden.—'How to Keep "Fit"; or, the Soldiers' Guide to Health in Field, Camp, and Quarters.' Compiled by Surg.-Capt. H. Waite, V.M.S. This is a little book which ought to be in the pocket of every soldier and sailor. 'A man may know his drill, be a good shot, &c., but unless he maintains his health and fitness, he becomes not only useless, but actually an incumbrance.' A few of the subjects simply and sensibly dealt with are Bathing, Bites from Animals, &c., Burns, Cleanliness, Climate, Clothing, Cuts and Wounds, Care of the Hair, Teeth, Feet, &c., Gymnastics, Temperance.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'The Self-Educator in Botany,' by R. S. Wishart, M.A., edited by John Adams, M.A., B.Sc. The object of this work is sufficiently indicated by the title. It will be found a very practical little treatise on the subject, placing before the reader the facts of botany in such clear simple language as can be easily grasped and retained. An exceedingly useful feature of the book is the suggestions which are appended for continuing the study of the science. The book is not overdone with illustrations, but all that are necessary are given.

From Messrs. Crosby Lockwood & Son.—'Every Man's Own Lawyer: a Handy Book of the Principles of Law and Equity.' This well-known work has now reached a thirty-eighth edition, which is ample evidence in itself of the excellence and reliability of its information. The more important additions to the present issue are due to the enactment by Parliament during last year's session of a number of new measures of exceptional utility. Among these may be mentioned the Companies Act, the Money Lenders Act, the Agricultural Holdings Act, the Finance Act, the Wild Animals in Captivity Protection Act, and the Workmen's Compensation Act. In regard to the more familiar features of the book the information has been thoroughly brought up to date, and in some respects considerably extended and improved upon. So far as it is possible in legal difficulties to do without professional assistance, 'Every Man's Own Lawyer' supplies an admirable counsellor and guide, and its value to the business man can scarcely be over-estimated. It shows him in concise terms how to seek and obtain redress for every injury and wrong; how to substantiate his rights; how to buy or sell an estate, a house, a ship, a horse, or any other thing; how to enter into contracts of all kinds, and with all persons; how to hire and let farms, houses, lands and tenements; how to take and give warranties, guarantees, notices, &c.; and perform in a legal manner all similar and everyday transactions. If intelligently consulted it will save the reader many a fee that would otherwise find its way into the well-lined pocket of the solicitor.

From the London School Atlas Co., Ltd.—

We have received 'The London School Atlas,' an atlas of general geography for use in schools, edited by H. O. Arnold-Forster, M.A., and published in three editions (2s., 3s., and 3s. 6d.) for the Atlas Company by Messrs. Cassell & Co., size $9\frac{1}{2} \times 12$ in., with forty-eight pages of maps in colour and eight pages of text. In many respects this new atlas is a great advance on anything of the kind that we have seen. In addition to extremely clear and well printed political maps, there are physical and historical ones, maps showing ocean currents, a sea map reduced from an admiralty chart; with many diagrams in colour illustrating latitude and longitude, the curvature of the earth, &c. The text includes illustrated articles on 'The Meaning of a Map,' 'The Meaning and Use of Scale in Maps,' 'Mountain and Lake,' section and contour map of Wastwater, 'Methods of showing elevation,' &c.; in fact, a better introduction to the study of geography does not exist, and we congratulate Mr. Arnold-Forster on the success of his design to produce a cheap and good school atlas embodying modern ideas.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Algebra for Elementary Schools, Part II,' by H. S. Hall, M.A., and R. J. Wood, B.A. This is an admirable little work, efficiently designed to meet the requirements of junior scholars. Mr. Hall has had such long experience, not only in educational pursuits, but in the construction of mathematical books, that he knows to a nicety how best to present his subject, and in the present instance he seems to have been admirably aided by Mr. Wood. The little work should be found of excellent service.—'Text-Book of Book-Keeping,' by Frank Ireson, B.A. Book-keeping is scarcely the easy going rule-of-thumb pursuit that some people practically unacquainted with its character would suppose, and it presents intricacies that Mr. Ireson's volume very well exposes. A sound knowledge of book-keeping, in other words, is not easily acquired, though its great importance can scarcely be questioned. In the attainment of this knowledge Mr. Ireson's book will undoubtedly serve a very useful purpose. His object has been to provide a handbook which can first be used at school, or for private study, by anyone who starts with no knowledge whatever either of business or of book-keeping; which later on can be employed in preparation for examinations such as those of the Society of Arts; and which finally can be taken into an office, and there be used as a book of reference, by those who are engaged in business. This seems a tolerably wide aim, but on the whole we are inclined to think that the book excellently fulfils these requirements, and will be found of assistance by all the classes enumerated. It is clear, concise, and well arranged, and no better qualities than these could be desired in a volume dealing with a thoroughly practical subject.—'L'Âme de Beethoven,' par Pierre Cœur, adapted and edited by De V. Payen-Payne. This is one of 'Siepmann's Elementary French Series,' of which the general editors are Otto Siepmann and Eugène Pellissier. The work which has here been selected for inclusion in the series is admirably adapted for the purpose, and is of such a character as will readily elicit the pupils' interest. Nor should we omit a word of high praise for the notes, which are excellent instances of what such contributions should be, being clear and concise explanations of textual difficulties rather than mere translations of the difficult passages or learned disquisitions on grammatical curiosities and philological distinctions. The book is thoroughly practical in all its bearings.

From the same.—'Number One and Number Two,' by Frances Mary Peard. Most girls, we suppose, form foolish fancies in their earlier years, and so it is with the heroine of Miss Peard's interesting novel. In subsequent years Bride Kennedy meets the man for whom she can thoroughly and steadfastly care, but unfortunately he has an imperfect knowledge of the past and believes that her affections are centred in her first lover. From this some highly absorbing complications ensue, but matters are eventually cleared up in the last chapter. The story is perhaps not remarkable for any striking or original feature, but it possesses a general interest that is certain to hold the reader's attention, and in the matter of diction and style it has many claims to notice. Briefly, it may be said to be a refined, well-written novel, the work of a woman with cultivated instincts and shrewd observation; but this is a criticism that will apply to all Miss Peard's novels, with which our readers are no doubt well acquainted. The last, however, is certainly not the least fascinating of the series.

From the same.—'French Course for Evening Classes, First Year,' by A. C. Poiré, principal of the Northern Institute of Languages, Leeds and Bradford. The author of this little book has taught French to English students for twenty-five years. The course outlined is a combination of the oral and book methods. It has been practically tried, and with successful results, by the author and his staff in giving instruction to upwards of one thousand students annually during a period of eight years. A rule strongly insisted on by the author is that the teacher should 'allow the pupils to see the spelling only after they have heard, understood, and repeated the sounds.' The little work is admirably arranged and very clearly printed in good type—a great point in a book intended for the use of evening classes. A companion work giving a large number of conversation sentences is also published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.

From the same.—'The Kipling Reader: Selections from the Books of Rudyard Kipling,' (Price 1s. 9d.) This little work can be recommended to all admirers of Mr. Kipling's works for the sake of the notes at the end, in which such expressions as 'Kubber-Kargaz,' 'phulkaris,' 'pulton,' 'waler,' 'Hrrump,' &c. are explained; for instance, it might be distinctly useful to know that 'Hrrump' means the 'peculiar and significant snort of an elephant when he has resolved to do mischief.' We are not sure that we envy the boys who will get whacked into learning Kipling—the outlandish words in his stories are as thick as bones in a herring—but for all qualifying for the Indian Civil Service this Reader will be most useful.

From Messrs. Morgan & Scott.—'Music from the Harps of God; for the solace of the sorrowful,' by Mrs. Campbell. ($7\frac{1}{2} \times 9\frac{1}{2}$, price 1s.) 'The meditations contained in this volume appeared from time to time in the pages of the Christian. Testimonies having been given that the Master has been pleased to use them for the comfort and relief of some of His children in times of trouble, they are now issued in more permanent form, with the earnest hope and prayer that He will use them more and more.' The little volume is very nicely got up, but we should like to know Mrs. Campbell's authority for the statement that the devil 'likes to fish in troubled waters.'

From Messrs. James Nisbet & Co.—'The Church Directory and Almanack, 1901.' This new work, which promises to be of excellent service to those engaged in ecclesiastical affairs, is divided into three parts. In the first the information concerns the study, the pulpit, and the parish; the second contains a directory of the archbishops, bishops, and clergy; while the third supplies an alphabetical list of benefices. Within the almanack itself we have a calendar and dictionary, with space for daily memoranda; a set of pulpit outlines for the Church's year; a list of colonial bishops, with the number of their clergy; accounts of the work and progress of the large missionary societies, together with a list of their European representatives; reports of church work among soldiers and sailors, with lists of the Army and Navy chaplains; and much other information concerning the work of the Church at home and abroad. As a first issue 'The Church Directory and Almanack' shows a practical arrangement and accuracy of detail which is worthy of all praise, and, serviceable as the book is now, we have little doubt that in future editions it will be still further improved.

From the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.—'Golden Sunbeams: a Church Magazine for Children,' Vol. 4, 1900. (Small quarto, 1s. 4d.) This is a delightful miscellany for the children, one of the cheapest and best of the illustrated books of the kind; the stories are bright and slight, and not at all sermonized; the pictures are excellent—Miss Edith Farmiloe is evidently an admirer of Phil May.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'First Aid to the Injured,' with special reference to accidents occurring in the Mountains, by Dr. Oscar Bernhard, translated from the German by Michael G. Foster, M.A., M.D. (Camb.). We are afraid there is little in praise that we can say of this work. The detailed description given of the human body in its bearing on the assistance of the injured is meagre in the extreme, and mainly relies on not very clearly outlined diagrams. But in the suggestions given in the case of mountain accidents the volume is certainly useful, and in fact it is chiefly intended for guides, climbers, and adventurous travellers generally. Mr. Foster in his translation seems to have had exceptional difficulties to deal with.

From Messrs. Williams & Norgate.—'Introduction to the Textual Criticism of the Greek New Testament,' by Eberhard Nestle, Ph.D. Translated from the second edition (with corrections and additions by the author) by William Edie, B.D., and edited, with a preface, by Allan Menzies, D.D. Students of the New Testament are well acquainted by reputation with Professor Nestle, and are aware of the erudition and painstaking labour he has brought to bear upon this subject. Few men have done more to facilitate the study of the text of the New Testament, or have contributed in a greater degree to the elucidation of difficult points. This volume, forming one of Messrs. Williams & Norgate's 'Theological Translation Library,' is certainly not the least important of the series. The author in a masterly manner goes over the main points of his subject, and thoroughly examines the history of the printed text since 1514, the materials of the textual criticism of the New Testament, and the theory and praxis of this; finally concluding with some critical and highly interesting notes on various passages of the New Testament, with two useful appendices, an index of subjects, and an index of New Testament passages that are referred to. The entire volume forms an important contribution to the theological literature of the period.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

THE ROYAL SCHOOL SERIES—RECENT ADDITIONS

An entirely New Series of Literary Reading Books, specially adapted to Girls' and Mixed Schools.

THE ROYAL PRINCESS READERS

New Lessons. Carefully Graded. Many Coloured Illustrations.

The Lessons are carefully selected, graduated, and edited. The Illustrations are the work of well-known artists. Many Coloured Pictures, beautifully reproduced by the Three Colour Process, adorn each book. The type is beautifully clear. The paper and binding are of the highest quality.

No pains have been spared to make THE ROYAL PRINCESS READERS the most attractive yet published.

READY.

Book I. Price 8d.

Book III. Price 1s.

Book II. Price 10d.

Book IV. Price 1s. 3d.

Books V. and VI. are in active preparation.

Sound literary workmanship, careful editing, beautiful illustrations, good paper, printing, and binding, are special features of this set of Readers, which ought to find great favour in every school; for though THE ROYAL PRINCESS READERS are primarily intended for girls, they contain much that will benefit and delight boys.

'OVER THE HILLS AND FAR AWAY.' A continuous Story Reader for the 'Sixes.' (Being No. 2 of Nelson's Supplementary Infant Readers.) Four Coloured and many other beautiful illustrations. An entrancing Reader for the Infant School. Cloth, price 6d.

A LITTLE HISTORY OF THE WEST OF ENGLAND (comprising the Counties of Cornwall, Devon, Somerset, Gloucester, Wilts, and Dorset.) Uniform with 'A Little History of Lancashire' and 'A Little History of Yorkshire.' With numerous illustrations. Price 9d.

NELSON'S METRIC ARITHMETICS. By G. CHRISTIAN, B.A., and A. H. BAKER, B.A. Three Books providing a complete Course. Simple, Graduated, Scientific. Book I. for Standards III. and IV., Book II. for Standard V. Price 2d. paper, 3d. cloth. Book III. for Standards VI. and VII. Price 3d. paper, 4d. cloth.

NELSON'S NEW DRAWING COURSE. By J. VAUGHAN, Art Master, London School Board. The only scheme published for co-ordinating the ordinary forms of Manual Occupations with Freehand, Free-arm, Ruler Drawing, and Design. Each Set consists of ten strong Manilla paper sheets printed on both sides, one side outline, the other in colour. Set 1 now ready.

Size of sheets, 20 by 27 inches, mounted on roller to turn over. Price 12s. 6d. Also in strong cloth portfolio, price 15s. (Illustrated Prospectus on application.)

"BE YE TRANSFORMED BY THE RENEWING OF THE MIND"

New Methods in Education.

By J. LIBERTY TADD,

Director of the Public School of Industrial Art, Member of the Art Club, Sketch Club, and Educational Club, and of the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia.

Art. Real Manual Training. Nature Study.

Explaining processes whereby hand, eye, and mind are educated by means that conserve vitality and develop a union of thought and action.

WITH 478 PICTURES AND 44 FULL-PAGE PLATES

Showing children and teachers practising these new methods for their work. A revelation to all interested in developing the wonderful capabilities of young or old. The pictures instantly fascinate every child, imbuing it with a desire to do likewise. Teachers and parents at once become enthusiastic and delighted over the Tadd methods, which the book enables them to put into practice. Size, 7½ × 10½ inches, 456 pages, fine plate paper, beautifully bound in cloth boards.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

GERMAN PREPOSITIONS AT A GLANCE

A Series of Simple Scenes for the Practical Study of the German Prepositions through Graphic Pictures

By C. KAISER and A. THOUAILLE

'The idea of representing the various applications of the German prepositions pictorially is a happy one, and this booklet, which is, we believe, the first attempt to do so practically and systematically, has received the favourable notice of Professor Rippmann, Dr. Weiss, and other well-known authorities.'—BOOKSELLER.

'The correct use of the cases governed by the various prepositions in German is, undoubtedly, one of the greatest difficulties in learning the language. The using of the right prepositions in the right place is not always easy, but the fact of there being three cases for substantives following intensifies the trouble. By means of pictures and the use of prepositions in conjunction with the objects shown therein, the subject is made both simple and attractive. The book deserves cordial recommendation as presenting the best method of overcoming a recognised difficulty.'

THE FOURTH EDITION OF JACKSON'S PRACTICAL ARITHMETIC

Enlarged by the addition of over ONE THOUSAND New Questions, which brings the grand total to upwards of EIGHT THOUSAND EXAMPLES.

Foolscap 8vo. cloth, 460 pages, price FOUR SHILLINGS.

'The book contains a very great deal that is not only new but excellent in idea and in detail. . . . The tendency of the book is to make the youthful student self-reliant and to increase his mental capacity for figures. . . . It is one of the most complete school arithmetics in existence.'—SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE, July 1899.

'I have used your Arithmetic in the upper divisions of this school for some years, and can with confidence speak of its great value as a class-book. It quite fulfils all that you state concerning it.'—ISABELLA MULVANY, B.A., Headmistress, Alexandra School, Dublin.'

'In his "Practical Arithmetic" Mr. Jackson displays an originality and power which raise the treatment of this subject quite out of the ordinary dull routine into an atmosphere of intense intellectual activity.

'No book on this subject so suggestive for the teacher has appeared in our time.'—DAVID ROSS, M.A., B.Sc., LL.D., Principal, Church of Scotland Training College, Glasgow.'

'The section on fractional arithmetic surpasses anything hitherto produced.'—H.M. INSPECTOR.

'Of Arithmetics there is no end, but for this particular one we are inclined to anticipate an unending use. We have been unable to find any single one of the new methods which we do not conscientiously prefer to the old ones generally in vogue.'

EDUCATIONAL TIMES.

'Specially serviceable for those preparing for Civil Service and other examinations.'—CIVIL SERVICE GAZETTE.

'Decidedly superior in most respects to books hitherto in use.'—MORNING POST.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Among the works Messrs. Longmans are preparing for publication are:—'Ballast: a Novel,' by Myra Swan; 'Egypt and the Hinterland: a Contribution to the History of our Time,' by Frederic Walter Fuller; 'Some Records of the Later Life of Harriet, Countess Granville,' by her Granddaughter, the Hon. Mrs. Oldfield, with portraits; 'Charles William Ferdinand, Duke of Brunswick: a Study in the History of the Eighteenth Century,' by Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice; 'A History of the Christian Church, A.D. 29-324,' by the Rev. Herbert H. Kelly, M.A., Director of the Society of the Sacred Mission, Mildenhall, Suffolk; 'Historical Record of the 14th (King's) Hussars, from A.D. 1715 to A.D. 1900,' by Colonel Henry Blackburne Hamilton, M.A., Christ Church, Oxford, late commanding the regiment, with 32 photogravure portraits and numerous other illustrations in colours; 'Government or Human Evolution,' by Edmond Kelly, M.A., F.G.S., Vol. II. Collectivism and Individualism.

Lord Glenesk will preside at the sixty-second annual general meeting of the News-vendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution on Tuesday, February 12, at the Memorial Hall Buildings, Farringdon Street, at 7 P.M., to receive the report and balance sheet, to elect pensioners, to elect a trustee in the room of the late Mr. Peter Terry, and to transact such other business as may pertain to this meeting. The attendance of the Press, of the trade, and of all interested in the welfare of this Society is desired.

Messrs. Cassell & Company will publish immediately a Life of Queen Victoria for the million, under the title of 'Victoria, Queen and Empress: a Life Story of Britain's Greatest Ruler.' The work will consist of 64 large pages fully illustrated, and it will be issued as a special Memorial Number of the New Penny Magazine. Also a new

OUR QUEEN.

In common, one might almost say, with 'All the dwellers upon earth,' we have to bewail and lament the death of our beloved Mother Queen Victoria. 'Some of us who are very old remember the prayers in our churches for King George and King William; all of us, from childhood to old age, have been accustomed to the words—they are engraved on our hearts and minds—' Most heartily we beseech Thee with Thy favour to behold

Our Most Gracious Sovereign Lady QUEEN VICTORIA.

This prayer, or the same in other words, has ascended, during all their lives, from countless myriads of Christians, Jews, and Gentiles of all denominations, throughout the world, wherever our tongue is spoken. 'In health and wealth' our good Queen has long lived, and now she has surely attained that 'Everlasting Joy and Felicity' so long and so fervently besought for her. We all feel that we have lost that which seemed to be a part of ourselves and our lives—our loss is personal as well as national. It seems as if the whole world were in tears, because our Mother Queen has been taken from us. We can but submit to that which is the common lot of humanity. Now it becomes our duty to reconcile ourselves to the new form of prayer, and to hope and pray that Our Most Gracious Sovereign Lord King Edward will follow the most admirable example that has been always before him, that he may be permitted 'long to reign over us,' and that we may always be able to say with heart and voice issue of the 'Life and Times of Queen Victoria,' brought down to the close of the Queen's reign. The work will be issued in monthly parts, of which the first will be published early next month. A Rembrandt photogravure of a much admired recent portrait of the Queen will be presented with Part 1. 'Victoria the Good: Her Life in Pictures,' is the title of a new work which will be issued in a few days by Messrs. Cassell & Company. It will consist of a large collection of portraits of the Queen printed on art paper.

GOD SAVE THE KING!

Tuesday, January 22, 1901.

'Oriental Rugs' is the brief title of a most valuable and interesting work by John Kimberley Mumford. Twenty years ago fine specimens of antique Oriental rugs were readily obtainable, now perfect antique specimens are growing scarce. The author is a collector of rugs, and by years of study has become recognised as an expert. He has travelled widely through the East, collecting material for this work, which contains sixteen photochromes (colour-plates) produced by a new process, eight artotypes of designs rather than colours, eight half-tone illustrations from the author's photographs, and two maps. These, with the text of over 300 pages, form a superb quarto volume, in handsome binding. The work will shortly be published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.

'Highways and Byways in East Anglia,' by William A. Dutt, illustrated by Mr. Pennell, will shortly be added to Macmillan & Co.'s 'Popular' series. Mr. Dutt does not indeed cover the whole of East Anglia, but Norfolk, Suffolk, and part of Cambridgeshire—leaving Essex and Lincolnshire untouched. Mr. Pennell has never been better fitted with subjects for his pencil.

'The first editor of the Times, appointed by John Walter the Second in 1810, was Dr. (afterwards Sir John) Stoddart. He quarrelled with Walter in 1817, and was succeeded by Thomas Barnes, who sat in the chair until his death in 1841, when the most famous of all Times editors reigned in his stead. John Thaddeus Delane was then not quite twenty-four—the same age as William Pitt when he rose to the Premiership. He was followed in October 1877 by Thomas Chenery, who, dying in February 1884, was succeeded by the present editor, Mr. George Earle Buckle. Thus only six persons have had the direction of the Times during more than 112 years.'—Westminster Gazette.

A new book by Miss Hannah Lynch, entitled 'French Life in Town and Country,' will be published by the end of the month by Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd. It may, perhaps, be described as an 'Impressionist' view of French home and social life, based on the experience of a long residence in France. There will be some appropriate illustrations, and the book is intended to be the first of a series descriptive of every-day life among 'Our Neighbours on the Continent.' Similar volumes on German, Russian, and Dutch life will follow at short intervals, each written by Englishmen who have lived long on the Continent and so are enabled to write with fulness of knowledge and impartiality.

Dr. Hugh Macmillan has prepared for press an important work on the Highland part of the course of the Tay, dealing with Strathfillan, Glendochart, Killin, Loch Tay, Kenmore, Taymouth Castle, Aberfeldy, Strathtay, Dunkeld, and it is illustrated with over fifty vivid pictures of the district by Mr. Scott Rankin, a well-known local artist. It will be published by Messrs. Virtue & Co.

Miss Lucy Yates has just passed through the press her small book, 'Convalescents' Diet'; it is written from the practical point of view of a nurse and cook, and should prove of much interest at the present time, when so many are suffering from influenza and other illnesses. It will be published by Messrs. H. Virtue & Co., Ltd., Ivy Lane, London.

Under the title 'First on the Antarctic Continent' Mr. Borchgrevink, the commander of the recent Antarctic Expedition, has now completed the account of his voyage in 'The Southern Cross' and of the adventures and incidents in the land near the South Pole. The volume will be published very shortly by George Newnes, Ltd. Besides portraits and maps it will comprise about 180 illustrations from photographs taken during the expedition.

'The New Century Cookery Book' is the title of a work which Messrs. Spottiswoode & Co. Ltd. now have in the press, and which will shortly appear. It is to be a comprehensive book, dealing with theory and practice of cookery, selection of foods, compilation of menus, and everything pertaining to the important art of gastronomy.

The February number of the Art Journal will have as a frontispiece an etching by Fred Huth, after Botticelli's 'Madonna, Child, and St. John.'

In his book 'Britain's Title in South Africa,' a Canadian professor, Mr. J. Cappon, of Queen's University, Kingston, sets to work to confute the conclusions of Dr. Theal, which, as is well known, are not wholly favourable to the English record in South Africa.

A new edition of 'Finn and his Companions,' by Standish O'Grady, with illustrations by Jack B. Yeats, will be published by Mr. Fisher Unwin next week in his 'Children's Library.'

A new novel by Mary C. Rowsell, entitled 'The Heir of Willowcote,' will be issued this spring for serial purposes by the National Press Agency.

Mr. Martinus Nijhoff, of The Hague, announces an important work on early Spanish and Portuguese typography, entitled 'Typographie Ibérique du Quinzième

S^{si}ècle: Reproduction en Facsimile de tous les Caractères Typographiques employés en Espagne et en Portugal jusqu'à l'Année 1500,' with critical and biographical notes by Conrad Haebler.

The anonymous author of 'An Absent-Minded War' wishes it to be known that the reports as to his identity are 'curiously wide of the mark.'

THE GREATEST MANAGER ON EARTH.

Messrs. Chatto & Windus have just published a book which is certain to attract a good deal of attention in this country as well as in America. This is no less a work than the 'Memories,' related by 'The Greatest Manager on Earth,' of the famous men and women he managed. Major J. B. Pond's 'Eccentricities of Genius, Memories of Famous Men and Women of the Platform and Stage,' is a book which leads you on from page to page because of its gossip—grateful, gushing, and nearly always generous gossip—about the great and little people the Major has met with in his long career as manager of lecture tours.

At the end of his book the Major tells us candidly that he 'never desired to make great money. My object has been the approbation of those I served,' and he nearly always got it, judging from the many friendly letters he quotes from Henry Ward Beecher, Josh Billings, George W. Cable, Hall Caine, Mark Twain, Marion F. Crawford, Dr. Conan Doyle, the Dean of Rochester, Anthony Hope, W. D. Howells, Sir Henry M. Stanley, the Dean of Ely, Ian Maclaren, I. Zangwill, and others.

Major Pond derives his admiration for 'great people' and desire to exploit them from his father, whose 'ideal' was Charles Sumner. In his introduction he says:—

'After I had got back from Kansas and visited my father's home in Wisconsin, father said to me "James, the Honorable Charles Sumner is going to speak at R—. We must hear him." So we walked nine miles to hear him speak. . . . Father occupied a front seat with the intention of rushing up to the platform and greeting him by the hand when he was finished, but the Honorable Charles was too quick for him. He disappeared and got to his hotel. . . .

'Father said: "James, the Honorable Charles Sumner is going to Milwaukee tomorrow morning, and we can ride with him a part of the way."

'We were on the train early the next morning, and so was the Honorable Charles Sumner. He was sitting reading in the drawing-room car.

'Father stepped up and said: "The Honorable Charles Sumner? I have read all your speeches. I feel that it is the duty of every American to take you by the hand. This is my son. He has just returned from the Kansas conflict."

'Honorable Charles Sumner did not see father nor his son, but he saw the porter and said: "Can you get me a place where I will be undisturbed?"

'Poor father! His heart was almost broken. During his last twenty-five years he never again referred to the Honorable Charles Sumner.'

Fortunately for the world, the son is a far better hand at standing a rebuff than 'father' was, and does not in the least mind telling a story against himself. He almost persuaded Mr. Gladstone to lecture in America, and Mr. Gladstone asked him to breakfast, and had a stenographer behind a curtain to take down the Major's stories.

In his notice of General Horace Porter the Major quotes one or two of the General's yarns. Speaking at a dinner given in his honour by the Lotos Club, General Porter said:—

'So far, you have made things easy for me, but my experience has been somewhat like that of a man whom I met in Texas. I got into conversation with him, and he remarked to me: "I have struck a big thing." I asked him in what manner he had struck this big thing, and he replied: "I was sent down here by a religious organization to distribute tracts, and every time I gave a man a tract in Texas he invariably hauled out a gun from one pocket and a bottle of whiskey from the other, and, handing me the bottle, he said, "Say, drink some of this, and drink it p—d—q—, or my gun will go off." I have not had to pay for my liquor in this State since I have been distributing tracts.'

Later on in his speech something reminded the General of the story of the Scotsman who was riding on the railway from Perth to Inverness, and who was chewing his ticket in his mouth. A friend who was with him said: 'You are very extravagant to be chewing up a ticket that cost twelve shillings and sixpence.'

'Nay, mon'; he replied, 'it is a leemited ticket, and I am only sucking off the date.'

MAJOR POND AND DR. TALMAGE.

One of the greatest men who ever lived, in Mr. Pond's view, was Henry Ward Beecher, and he has some interesting pages about tours he made with his friend, but for 'showing the works,' as it were of the lecture business, there is nothing to approach the twenty pages relating how 'the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage made a lecture tour under my management in England in 1879.' Most of us remember the furor there was to hear Dr. Talmage, whose sermons had been reprinted in Dr. Baxter's Christian Herald and Mr. John Lobb's Christian Age. Major Pond suggested to Dr. Talmage that he should lecture in England, and offered in writing to give him 10,000 dollars for a hundred lectures, and pay all the Doctor's and Mrs. Talmage's expenses out and home. Dr. Talmage accepted next morning in writing, only stipulating that his daughter should be included in the terms, and to this Major Pond agreed.

They all arrived in London in due course, where Dr. Baxter and Mr. Lobb were awaiting them, but it was past midnight, and the meeting was deferred to next day, when the Rev. Dr. Baxter turned up at eight o'clock, and paid a thousand dollars for what he wanted, but not before the Major had 'intimated that a Mr. Lobb, of the Christian Age, had some proposition to make.'

The announcement in the Christian Herald that Dr. Talmage was in England to lecture brought over five hundred applications from people who wanted terms for the Doctor to preach or lecture. Immense crowds attended his first appearance in England when he preached at the Islington Presbyterian Church, Colebrooke Row.

'That Sunday evening,' says Major Pond rather wickedly, 'Dr. Talmage and I walked out and had our first private business talk. We crossed the street to Westminster Abbey, and walked all round it, discussing the wonders of the historic Abbey for some time, when the Doctor suddenly changed the subject:

"Wasn't that the most tremendous, overwhelming reception that a minister ever had?" he said to me. "This excitement is going to use me all up. I can never stand it. What have you done?"

'I replied that I had fixed my first ten nights with the Leeds Y.M.C.A. all in the large cities.

"I cannot stand it. I am sure it will break me down. How much am I to get out of it?"

'I replied, "You get your $100 a night and your expenses; isn't that our contract?"

"Oh, I can't do that. It would be the ruin of my health; and you would be getting rich and I have nothing."

"Wait, my dear Dr. Talmage, and see how it starts. I came here under terms of a contract with you, and now you don't seem to consider it binding."

"I can't do it, I can't stand it, and must give the whole thing up unless I can have at least $250 a lecture."

So they sat on the steps of Westminster Abbey until 2 o'clock on Monday morning.

At breakfast the Doctor handed the Major a note agreeing to take $200 a lecture for 100 lectures. Major Pond assented to this, and they started for Nottingham—where the people were 'enthusiastic to the verge of insanity,' and to Birmingham, which 'surpasses all,' as the Doctor said. But after Manchester, where the Major had to be passed on their hands over the crowd until he was nearly in the centre of the great Free Trade Hall—Dr. and Mrs. Talmage called on the Major.

'There was very little ceremony. The Doctor struck right out from the shoulder. It was business!

"You have got to pay me $350 a lecture or I go home from here. I cannot stand this tremendous succession of ovations."

'Not unnaturally Major Pond asked, "If you can do it for $350, can't you stand the same thing for the price agreed upon in London?"

Finally Major Pond offered $250, which the Doctor accepted, instead of taking the 'next steamer to New York,' and the Major 'hired an English lawyer to draw up papers that will hold.'

In the result, according to Major Pond, 'The Doctor got all that was made on the tour, $17,500' (£3,500), and the Major 'his labour for his pains,' and he adds, 'I have made very few engagements for Dr. Talmage since.'

A NORWEGIAN FORM OF SAFEGUARDED OPEN ACCESS TO FREE LIBRARIES.

Allow me, says a correspondent of the New York Library Journal, to call your attention to our system of open shelves for juvenile readers.

The books, carefully selected, are put in cases three shelves high, standing on a counter running alongside three walls at a distance of one metre or more. The counter is eighty-nine centimetres high where the cases containing books for juvenile readers (ages fourteen to eighteen) stand, and eighty-one centimetres in the section for younger folks (ages nine to thirteen). The cases on top of the counter are guarded by wire screens. The books stand with their backs to the readers, who can examine the gilt titles through the screens, but cannot take the books away.

The books stand arranged according to numbers behind the screens, which are made to slide down, when the boy, whose duty it is to put the books back on the shelves, turns a simple conductor's key.

When the children enter the lending department from the doorway in the fourth wall, they find themselves, as it were, in a large cage surrounded by books numerically arranged, easy to examine but impossible to steal. Finding lists, pencils, and small slips of paper are provided, and the children write down the numbers and hunt for the books. When the book is found, they push it forward with the index finger, and the assistant behind the case takes the book, explains its character, and lets the child examine it if desired.

The safeguarded cases in our juvenile lending department hold 1,500 volumes. As we started with 5,000 volumes we could not display all the books from the beginning. In a short time, however, as the books were drawn, we had all the books which were not in circulation on exhibition behind wire screens, and at present we have not books enough to fill half the cases in the room.

In this way two lady assistants and one boy give out 500 volumes during eight hours with perfect ease. If necessary, they could handle 900 visitors a day, with one more boy to put the books back on the shelves.

INFLUENCE OF OPEN SHELVES ON CHOICE OF BOOKS.

In the recent report of the Pratt Institute Free Library is given an interesting comparative table, showing the number of times certain books were chosen for home reading from open shelves, as contrasted with the issue of the same books from the stack. Miss Plummer says: 'As the book cards of these books were filed they were filed for statistics, and the number of times a book had been circulated from the open shelves was compared with the number of times it had gone out from the stack in the same length of time. A few of these statistics may be interesting to those librarians using modified free access, whose system of charging does not enable them to make this comparison.'

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

Thomas Guy, says Mr. Knight, was too sagacious a man to resist the pretensions of powers so influential in the counsels of the Stuarts. With a more than common share of ability and perseverance he finally induced the University of Oxford to contract with him for an assignment of their privilege. He bought type from Holland and set about printing Bibles in London, and soon established a large trade therein.

In the first two or three years of his struggle for fortune he had to maintain his position by the exercise of the most scrupulous frugality. He was his own servant, having his dinner sent in to him from a neighbouring cookshop, and eating it on his counter, using an old newspaper for his table-cloth. Mr. Knight doubts the accuracy of this report, because at that time the largest newspaper issued was the size of an ordinary dish. Well, it does not seem necessary on that account to deprive Mr. Guy of this mark and proof of his frugality—let us suppose that instead of a newspaper he used a couple of old demy broadside proofsheets.

Perhaps the most interesting episode in the young publisher's career occurred when he had attained his 28th year. He begins to feel lonely. He indulges himself with the luxury of a maidservant, who cooks his meals and keeps his linen in order. He cares little about society, he but rarely dines in his Company's Hall. Now this neat-handed Phillis had never wasted his money or victuals while in his service; he asked her to marry him, and he was graciously accepted.

But alas! the frugal maiden made one fatal mistake, she had not sufficiently learned the lesson of implicit obedience to his will. Some paviers were at work laying down some pavement in front of the shop, under very special and definite instruction given them by Mr. Guy. The workmen finding that a certain portion remained unpaved went to him for further instruction. Unhappily for the future destiny of himself and the maiden, he was not at home. 'Do as you wish,' said the infatuated girl; 'tell him I bade you, and I am sure he will not be angry!' History recordeth not the words that passed, but Thomas Guy's little love episode is for ever at an end, and if the maiden was ever married at all it must have been to someone else.

It had been stated by a writer in Mr. Nichols' 'Literary Anecdotes' that the bulk of Mr. Guy's fortune was acquired by purchasing seamen's pay tickets at a discount of forty or fifty per cent. during Queen Anne's wars, and by South Sea stock—in the memorable year 1720. Mr. Knight, however, points out that the practice of paying seamen by tickets belonged to the time of Charles II. and had fallen into disuse before Queen Anne's time.

Under William III., in 1692, a loan of a million was sanctioned by Parliament, and of this he is said to have taken up a portion. Two years after he was elected as a member of Parliament for Tamworth, the town of his early days and his frequent benefactions.

Maitland says of his early career: 'As he was a man of unbounded charity and universal benevolence, so was he likewise a great patron of liberty and the rights of his fellow-subjects, which to his great honour he strenuously asserted in divers Parliaments whereof he was a member,' from 1695 to 1707.

The only contemporaneous notice of Guy is by John Dunton, the bookseller. In a work published in 1705, he says: 'He makes an eminent figure in the Company of Stationers, having been chosen Sheriff of London, and paid the fine, and is now member of parliament for Tamworth. . . . He is a man of strong reason and can talk very much to the purpose on any subject you will propose. He is truly charitable, his almshouses to the poor are standing testimonies.'

These almshouses were built at Tamworth in 1705; two years later he built three new wards to St. Thomas's Hospital, besides being a regular benefactor of £100 a year.

Mr. Roberts says that, according to Maitland, his private acts of charity were many; especially to his poor relations; he frequently accomplished the discharge from prison of insolvent debtors and reinstated them in business. He was constantly ready to advance money without interest to deserving young men to start in business.

Mr. Roberts also quotes an interesting story from the Saturday Magazine of August 2, 1834. One day, leaning over one of the bridges looking very despondent and melancholy, a bystander, thinking he was bent on suicide, implored him not to commit any rash act. Then quickly placing a guinea in his hand, he hastily withdrew. Guy followed the stranger, assured him that he was mistaken, and begged his address. Some years afterwards Guy, seeing the name of his friend in the bankruptcy list, hastened to his house, reminded him of the incident of the bridge, arranged with his creditors, and finally re-established him in his business, which prospered in his hands and those of his children's children for many years in Newgate Street, London.

He held Government securities to the amount of many thousands, and subscribed the same into the South Sea Company at 6 per cent. interest. During the subsequent ten years, being a fundholder at this moderate rate of interest, he made large benefactions to the Stationers' Company and Christ's Hospital.

In 1720, when he was seventy-six years old, came the culminating point of his prosperity. Parliament had sanctioned an increase of South Sea capital—at that time Guy held £45,500 of stock. No sooner was this increase of capital granted than there came a great run on the stock; and Mr. Guy, wisely considering that the great rise of the stock was owing to the iniquitous management of a few, began to 'unload,' as the modern phrase is; at first he sold at about three hundred for that which cost him about fifty or sixty, and he continued selling till it rose to six hundred, when he disposed of the last of his property in the said Company. This sagacious operation of his on the very brink of the bursting of the Bubble is regarded by his biographers as very legitimate business, and it would be difficult to gainsay it. He had held the stock for ten years previously, and he only took advantage of a rise in the market; but, after all, the money he so easily made came out of the pockets of the many hundreds of families who were completely ruined when the crash came. Indeed, it may almost be argued that Guy, under Providence, was the means of rescuing from the disaster over a quarter of a million of money for the sole purpose of building and endowing a great hospital for the benefit of the poor and distressed.

He got more money in three months of this eventful year than was needed for the erecting, furnishing, and endowing his hospital.

The building cost nearly £19,000, and the endowment by him amounted to £220,000; and he had the satisfaction of knowing that his gains had been worthily applied, when he saw his hospital roofed in before he died in 1724.

Thomas Guy's will, dated September 4, 1724, bequeaths lands and tenements in Staffordshire, Warwickshire, and Derbyshire to grandchildren of his deceased sister; about £75,000 4 per cent. annuities, mostly in sums of £1,000 each, to about ninety cousins in various degrees and others not relatives, and annuities varying from £10 to £200 a year, mostly to older relatives, being interest on £22,000 of stock; £1,000 was left to discharged poor debtors in sums not exceeding £5 each—600 persons were thus relieved. An annuity of £400 was left to Christ's Hospital for board and education of four poor children annually.

His death took place Dec. 27, 1724, in his eightieth year.

He was buried with great pomp after lying in state at the Mercers' Chapel.

In the centre of the square of Guy's Hospital is a bronze statue of Guy in his livery gown by Scheemakers; on the west side, in basso-relievo, is represented the parable of the Good Shepherd, and on the east Christ healing the impotent man.

TRADE CHANGE.

Mr. Otto Schulze, of 20 South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, has acquired the retail business of Foreign Booksellers carried on till now at the above address by Messrs. Williams & Norgate, and of which he has been manager for the last fifteen years. The business will be conducted under the name of Otto Schulze & Co.

THE NET BOOK SYSTEM.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—As a book-buyer I have read with considerable interest the discussion in your columns, and for my part I beg to state that I most decidedly object to the present net system; the fact really is, that by it you get no advantage for ready money, and I fail to see why this should be the case, not only in book-buying, but in any other business.

I fail to see why if I buy a book over the counter, and pay cash, I should not get my full discount.

I presume the object is to help the country bookseller, but will it? Won't the tendency be that in default of being able to get in London a discount for cash, country book-buyers will get them in the country, leaving the country booksellers to pay the carriage, which if you bought for cash in London you used to pay yourself, and won't it be that customers will take as much credit as they can get from the country bookseller, or else get the books from libraries, or else wait until they become second-hand?

I certainly hope that before long the old system of 25 per cent. discount for cash will be again reverted to.

Yours truly,

J. T. ATKINSON.

Selby: January 21, 1901.

[Our correspondent is a solicitor. Does he allow a discount for cash when a client consults him; does he get 25 per cent. discount every time he pays cash, say, for a watch, or a purse, or a pound of tea?—ED.]

SIR,—I am an assistant in a booksellers' shop and am seriously considering if I shall not leave the trade to take up a business to which there is a living profit attached.

Supposing I bought a business with a turnover of £4,000 per annum, under the most favourable circumstances of the net book system my profit would not exceed, all round, 20 per cent., and the working expenses of a business, taking into consideration book debts and bad stock, would be 15 per cent., being a personal profit of 5 per cent., namely £200 a year. Surely this is not a cheerful look-out for a young man, and there are many more ways in which his small capital could be put to better advantage.

Yours truly,

BOOKSELLERS' ASSISTANT.

ASSOCIATED BOOKSELLERS.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—We have received the Report of the Council of the Associated Booksellers for last year, and feel sure all their associates will read it with satisfaction.

Now that one great obstruction to profitable trading has been removed by stopping the cutting of net books, we hope the Council will devote their attention to the inordinate cutting of non-net books. For it is plain that if the discount off those books is increased (as is already the case by at least one important and old established firm in London) the success of the net system will be greatly impaired, if not altogether nullified.

But that matter will doubtless receive the consideration of our Council in due course. In the meantime we only wish to draw the attention of the Council to the fact that they ask for contributions towards their expenses without furnishing a balance-sheet, or even stating how much those expenses amount to. If their associates do not know that, how is it possible for them to know how little to subscribe without meanness, or how much without extravagance?

But is not the system of special donations towards ordinary current working expenses a bad one? Cannot an annual subscription be so fixed as to cover all such necessary outgoings?

Yours truly,

'NORTHERN.'

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Mr. George Allen.—'The True Christ and the False Christ,' by J. Garnier. Two volumes. The author of this work is certainly not backward in plain-speaking. He goes straight to the root of the matter, and his literary style, which is pointed and expressive, gives additional emphasis to his criticisms. From the very first chapter, in which he supplies a definition of a false Christ, he arrests the attention of the thoughtful reader, and he will be found to hold this attention by a course of clear, concise reasoning, until the last chapter of the second volume is reached. The captive will no doubt occasionally attempt to escape from his thralldom, will exclaim that his own views are completely at variance with the writer's, but he will read on nevertheless. Mr. Garnier's work in short is an exceedingly able exposition of the subject, one that will certainly not satisfy all parties, and that even among his own supporters will oftentimes provoke a feeling of remonstrance, but a work that will elicit admiration on account of its candour, moderation of tone, and excellent reasoning. Unfortunately, from considerations of space, we are unable to enter more thoroughly into the details of Mr. Garnier's treatise, but we may say that it will amply repay perusal, and the unbiassed will find much in its pages to earn their hearty commendation.

From Mr. Edward Arnold.—'The Story of my Captivity during the Transvaal War, 1899-1900,' by Adrian Hofmeyr. Mr. Hofmeyr commences his narrative from the moment of his capture at Lobatsi, a small railway station in British Bechuanaland, and carries it through the many weary miserable days of his imprisonment at Zeerust and Pretoria, until, to his inexpressible delight, he was released on May 12 of last year, and, having signed a declaration that he would not take up arms against the Republic, was permitted to board the train for Delagoa Bay. His experiences during captivity were painful enough, and more than once he nearly lost his life. Previous events had caused him to be anything but popular with the Boers, and in numerous instances he was the object of a vulgar and brutal revenge. On the other hand, Mr. Hofmeyr mercilessly exposes the hypocritical and mendacious character of his captors: For the burghers themselves, he has often a good word to say, but for their misguided Government and its chief advisers, none. All are hopelessly untruthful and corrupt. 'The burgher is all right—brave and honest and kind-hearted—till he falls under the baleful influence of his Government or becomes a Government official himself. Farewell, then, a long farewell, to all his simplicity and honesty of character! This has been too often experienced, and I have kept eyes and ears open.' The story of Mr. Hofmeyr's hardships is profoundly interesting, if at times a little verging on the hysterical, and the views he takes of the situation in South Africa are such as will readily commend themselves to the approval of all sensible readers.

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith. — 'A Twofold Silence,' by Edwin Hughes. The sensational incidents of this story, though a little unnatural, are of a character to absorb very thoroughly the reader's attention, and he will probably not rest content until he has investigated the mystery of the plot to its foundation. The title of the book originates from the fact that two of the main actors are condemned to a period of utter silence.

From Messrs. Asher & Co. — 'Roumania in 1900,' by G. Benger, translated by A. H. Keane, F.R.G.S. Imperial 8vo. 10s. net. This handsome and very cheap volume contains a good map, fourteen full-page plates, and twenty-six text illustrations, perfectly printed by the University Press, Edinburgh—in fact, we have never seen process blocks better printed. The work deals with a very interesting country from every aspect, and, as much British capital and enterprise is engaged in it, this authoritative and up-to-date work should prove most useful to English readers. It can hardly be said that the future of the Balkan States is assured, but every year which passes makes Roumania stronger—she can now put half a million soldiers into the field if called upon to do so—and as she commands the navigable mouth of the Danube will have a commanding position if the talk of débâcle ever comes. One of the photogravure plates is a most attractive portrait of 'Carmen Sylva,' Queen Elizabeth of Roumania, whose country is one of those we depend on for our daily bread.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. — 'Practical Electro-Chemistry,' by Bertram Blount, Consulting Chemist to the Crown Agents for the Colonies. This work will be found very useful by those taking up the study of those electro-chemical processes which are, or are likely to be, turned to industrial use. It is well printed and illustrated, and is divided into sections dealing with the winning and refining of metals by electrolytic means—(a) in aqueous solution, (b) in igneous solution, (c) in the electric furnace; electro-deposition (electrotyping, nickel-plating, &c.); alkali, chlorine, and their products; electrolytic manufacture of organic compounds and fine chemicals; and the last section deals with 'Power' (efficiency of existing methods—the carbon cell, the gas cell, water power).

From Mr. Henry Frowde. — 'The Three Friends: a Story of Rugby in the Forties,' by A. G. Buller, M.A. In a way this little story illustrates the athletic side of school life rather than its scholastic or social aspects. Without exactly being a defence of the modern educational tendency to the over-doing of out-door exercises, it shows what a valuable feature in the existence of the ordinary schoolboy this admiration of athletic power is; how it has transformed the old, lounging listless pupil of the past into a being of some alertness and ambition. The story is very entertaining, and there is a genuine air of reality in its incidents that will appeal very strongly both to old and young.

From Messrs. Hodder & Houghton. — 'The Ascent through Christ: a Study of the Doctrine of Redemption in the Light of the Theory of Evolution,' by E. Griffith-Jones, B.A. That a sixth edition of this work should have been already called for is ample proof that it has been appreciated by a very wide circle of readers. It is 'a study of certain spiritual facts which cluster round the mystery of Divine Redemption, viewed in the light of that great principle of Development which has taken possession of the mind to-day, and which seems destined, in its broader aspects, permanently to affect human thought in all its departments.' The very full 'contents' and index, and admirable general arrangement of the work, add immensely to its value as a work of reference for students.

From Mr. John Lane. — 'The Nut-Brown Maid,' a new version by F. B. Money-Coutts, with illustrations by Herbert Cole. In this version the thirty stanzas of Bishop Percy's rendering have been reduced by selection and rearrangement to seventeen. No doubt, as is pointed out, the original poem has gathered large accretions as it has been handed down from the fifteenth or sixteenth centuries, and it is not unnatural to suppose that a removal of some of these may give coherence and sequence to the story. On the whole, Mr. Money-Coutts has performed his task well, and the illustrations of Mr. Cole, with the dainty production of the book generally, supply an additional and all-powerful attraction.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd. — 'Book-keeping for Business Men,' by J. Thornton and S. W. Thornton. The author's plan has been to take the reader into partnership, insisting that he shall understand what he is about from beginning to end. The first four chapters explain the principles and advantages of double entry. Then follows a discussion of the question, 'What business shall we choose?' Having settled this point, reader and Thornton go into partnership, and open a set of books. The transactions which follow are planned to show how to meet bookkeeping difficulties of all kinds. A trial balance is taken at the end of every week, both members of the firm assisting in the work. A final balance is struck at the end of the month, the result being readily arrived at and clearly set forth by the use of the A. B. C. 'Automatic Balancing Charts' (sold separately, price 1s. the set). These charts are called automatic, 'because, if the entries are carefully made in strict numerical order, according to the instructions printed on each chart, they will balance and prove themselves.' As far as we have examined them, both manual and charts strike us as being exceedingly clear and business-like, and certain to be of the greatest value for those for whom they are intended.

For all NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, and PERIODICALS, send your subscriptions to WM. DAWSON & SONS, LTD., Cannon House, Bream's Buildings, London (established 1809). Catalogue gratis.

From Messrs. Marshall Brothers. — 'The All-Sufficient Saviour,' by the late Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, M.A. This earnest little work, written with deep feeling and devotion, proves a suitable addition to that excellent collection of volumes known as 'The Quiet Hour Series.' It should be productive of much beneficial influence.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son. — 'The Story of the Uganda Protectorate,' by General F. D. Lugard. The author of this, the latest volume in the 'Story of the Empire' series, has very ably condensed the history of the Uganda Protectorate into small space, and within the narrow limits at his command has managed to give us much interesting information regarding the country and its people, the national legends, the part played by Arab and European discoverers, and so forth. He also concisely reviews the influence of the Imperial British East Africa Company, the Declaration of the Protectorate, the Conquest of Unyoro, the Soudanese Mutiny, and other prominent events. Considering the restrictions within which he has worked we think he has done very well. A small map of the Uganda Protectorate is included in the volume.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Limited. — 'The Story of Thought and Feeling,' by Frederick Ryland, M.A. The author of this little volume has treated his subject in exceedingly happy fashion, and the reader will turn with pleasure over its pages without being made objectionably to feel that he is actually assisting at the elucidation of a somewhat abstruse subject. The book is primarily intended as an introduction to the study of some portions of the field of Psychology, and it will admirably serve this purpose. No previous volume in 'The Library of Useful Stories'—of which series it forms the latest issue—has been more calculated to inspire a deeper study of its subject.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. — 'The Life-Story of William Quarrier: a Boy's Resolve and What Came of It,' by the Rev. John Urquhart. The details of a life of much resolution and unselfish purpose are embodied in this volume, and it shows the growth of the work to which Mr. Quarrier has devoted his best energies, the reclamation and care of destitute children. The story is told in simple but none the less eloquent language, and numerous illustrations add to the interest of the text. As showing the extent of the work, it may be said that, during a period of twenty-nine years, upwards of 18,000 children have received welcome in the various homes of Mr. Quarrier's foundation. One of the most interesting portions of the book refers to the open-air treatment of consumption. This is accompanied by a large increase in food. It has been tried in Mr. Quarrier's homes with much apparent success.

From the Religious Tract Society. — 'Until the Day Breaks,' by William Landels, D.D. The object, we are told, with which the late Dr. Landels prepared this little work was to comfort the mournful, whatever might be the cause of their distress. It consists of brief homilies or meditations on texts which seem suited to its purpose. Originally, we believe, it was intended to be of a much more extended character, and to embrace readings of a devotional and consolatory nature for the fifty-two Sundays of the year. Unhappily the state of the author's health prevented the design being carried out in its entirety, and the little volume is now offered to the public in the hope that it may in some degree serve the same purpose as the first contemplated work. If earnest feeling and a sympathetic style, with a kindly application of the truths of religion, can achieve this purpose' Dr. Landels's volume should carry comfort into many a despairing household.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—A new and cheaper edition of 'The Hooligan Nights: being the life and opinions of a young and impenitent criminal, recounted by himself, and set forth by Clarence Rook.' The subject of Hooliganism is to the front in all our large towns, and especially in London. Alf., the hero of this deeply interesting study, was introduced to the author by Mr. Grant Richards in this way. Mr. Richards happened to show Mr. Rook some sheets of manuscript which contained certain confessions and revelations of a boy who professed to be a leader of Hooligans; Mr. R. was much interested in the 'engaging personality' behind these confessions, and he got Mr. Richards to arrange a meeting. The result is this vivid pen-picture of the young man 'who walks in your midst, ready to pick your pocket, rifle your house, and even bash you in a dark corner.'

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'Sir Walter Scott,' by William Henry Hudson. ('Scots Epoch Makers' series.) One can quite understand that when Professor Hudson came to realise the vast amount of material he had to deal with in his preparation for this comparatively small volume he was seized with a feeling 'akin to despair.' To condense such a wealth of information into such limited space must have seemed almost an impossibility. However, he has been very successful in his task, and the chief events of Scott's life, his childhood and schooldays, career at college, early literary attempts, and so forth, are described to excellent advantage and effect. Of course, in a work of this description it would be quite impossible to do thorough justice to the novelist's glowing personality or to enter with any fulness into the merits of his writings, but Professor Hudson has yet contrived to add three exceedingly interesting chapters on Scott's personal characteristics, his merits as a poet, and the 'Waverley Novels.' In the last named, he points out, the Wizard of the North 'wrote the epos of his country; henceforth Scotland, revealed to the world by his pen, is for all of us the land of Scott. This one fact illustrates the wide sweep of his work. In his books we enter as it were upon the broad highways of existence. "Oh, this literature that smells of literature!" exclaimed Turgénev in one of his letters. The modern schools talk more than enough about what they choose to consider "life"; but the misfortune is that the more they talk the stronger the pervading smell of literature becomes. With Scott, who spent little time in discussing the articles of his literary creed, we are not in the study theorising about life; we are among men and women, and in the stir of great events.' In these sentiments we very heartily concur.

From Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Ltd.—'The Evangelist's Wallet and Christian Worker's Note Book,' containing outlines of sermons, sermonettes, children's addresses, Bible talks, temperance chats, &c., compiled by J. Ellis, editor of the Tool Basket. A most useful, handy, compact pocket companion for the study, pulpit, class, or platform. Cloth, price 1s.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'In the Ranks of the C.I.V.: a Narrative and Diary of Personal Experiences with the C.I.V. Battery (Honourable Artillery Company) in South Africa,' by Driver Erskine Childers. This volume appears at an opportune time. The public mind has not yet recovered from the enthusiasm aroused by the doings of the C.I.V.s, and any account of their exploits is certain to be received with approbation.

Moreover, the present volume has certain claims over previous descriptions of the South African Campaign, in that it treats of the war from a different view-point; it is the narrative of a civilian combatant. We have had numerous other books on the war, but with only one or two exceptions they have either been from military men pure and simple or from war correspondents who have taken no part in the actual fighting. Here, however, we have the narrative of a man who had no previous experience of the horrors of warfare—in fact, he was a clerk in the House of Commons—and yet made a conspicuous appearance at the front. And a most absorbing narrative it is. From the moment of embarkation on board the 'Montfort,' the description of the author's experiences proceeds with an easy-going, happy swing that carries the reader over the ground in highly interesting fashion. At first matters of daily routine are chiefly enlarged upon, drill, stabling of horses, and so forth, but afterwards we come to more active life, and the excitement sensibly quickens. The account of the author's experiences is throughout undeniably attractive—mainly, no doubt, because it is so simply and unaffectedly written, with a manly disregard of minor discomforts and dangers that is certain to win the reader's admiration. It is interesting in conclusion to learn the author's opinions of the personal results of the war. 'Physically and mentally,' he says, 'I, like many others, have found this short excursion into strict military life of enormous value. To those who have been lucky enough to escape sickness, the combination of open-air and hard work will act as a lasting tonic against the less healthy conditions of town life. It is something, bred up as we have been in a complete civilisation, to have reduced living to its simplest terms, and to have realised how little one really wants. It is much to have learnt the discipline, endurance, and patience which soldiering demands.'

From the University Press, Cambridge.—'Political Theories of the Middle Age,' by Dr. Otto Gierke, Professor of Law in the University of Berlin, translated, with an Introduction, by F. W. Maitland, LL.D., D.C.L. In his admirably clear introduction Professor Maitland tells us that 'what is here translated is only a small, a twentieth, part of a large and as yet unfinished book bearing a title which can hardly attract many readers in this country, and for which an English equivalent cannot easily be found—namely, 'Das deutsche Genossenschaftsrecht.' Of that work the third volume contains a section entitled 'Die publicistischen Lehren des Mittelalters,' and that is the section which is here done into English. The following list of subjects dealt with in Professor Gierke's work will indicate its nature:—

1. The Evolution of Political Theory.
2. Macrocosm and Microcosm.
3. Unity in Church and State.
4. The Idea of Organisation.
5. The Idea of Monarchy.
6. The Idea of Popular Sovereignty.
7. The Idea of Representation.
8. The Idea of Personality.
9. The Relation of State to Law.
10. The Beginnings of the Modern State.

Of the immense value of this translation to English readers who are approaching the study of mediæval politics, either from the practical or from the theoretical side, there can be no question, the mere list of authorities quoted is overwhelming evidence of the author's labour and erudition. No wonder he says: 'It is not probable that for some time to come anyone will tread exactly the same road that I have trodden in long years of fatiguing toil.' Certainly English and American students owe a deep debt of gratitude to Professor Maitland for enabling them to follow the author over some part at least of the road he has explored through mediæval darkness. The work is admirably printed, and it is simply inexplicable that such a treasure-house of learning should be unprovided with an index.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd.—'The French Revolution: a History,' by Thomas Carlyle. Here is a volume of nearly 700 pages very attractively bound in cloth gilt, with the text on a good light handling paper, and the full-page illustrations well printed on special paper, and all to retail at 2s. Of course, there is no author to pay in this case, but even then we can only marvel at the quantity and quality of the paper and printing, and the illustrations are all printed separately.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

. In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch=2½ centimetres.

POPULAR ROYALTY

By ARTHUR H. BEAVAN

AUTHOR OF 'MARLBOROUGH HOUSE AND ITS OCCUPANTS.'

Royal 8vo. with a Photogravure Portrait of Her Majesty the Queen, after a Jewelled Miniature painted by Mrs. Corbould Ellis, and nearly 50 Full-page Plates, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

"Popular Royalty" is a happy title for a book which deals in an informal but well-intentioned manner with the personal charm and social life of the Queen and the Royal Family. . . . There are many simple but touching incidents recorded in these pages concerning Her Majesty's gentle but practical sympathy with old and young, and especially with wounded soldiers and crippled children."—STANDARD.

"Though primarily dealing with Royalty, Mr. Beavan's book aptly conveys a great deal of information regarding the royal residences at home and abroad, and also the many ceremonials, both civil and military, in which members of the reigning family take part . . . There is matter enough in the last five chapters to fill a whole volume, but the writer has collected a great deal of information which is trustworthy and instructive, and the contrasts drawn will be found very precise."—MORNING POST.

"Mr. Beavan's handsome and profusely illustrated volume is a loyal and courtly tribute to the admirable qualities and shining merits of our gracious Queen, and of the principal members, dead as well as living, of the British Royal Family."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"He has much to say which is at once fresh and interesting, and which even when it is not the one it is at least the other. The public is never tired of reading about its favourite. Perhaps the most notable feature of the volume is to be found in its illustrations, which include reproductions of portraits, pictures, and photographs not easily accessible, and here presented by gracious and express permission. Royal buildings are shown from novel points of view, and royal personages in unaccustomed guise and circumstances. The total result is a book which is likely to find a large number of interested readers."—GLOBE.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

CHIVERS' BOOK ISSUE INDICATOR AND CHARGING SYSTEM.

That this Indicator is steadily gaining ground is shown by the fact that it has been adopted by the following Public Libraries :

BRADFORD.
BROMSGROVE.
CAMPBELTON, N.B.
CARLISLE.
DEWSBURY.
DERBY.
GRIMSBY.
HYDE.
JOHANNESBURG, S.A.
LANCASTER.

The Chivers' Indicator,
4,000 numbers.

The other Indicator,
4,000 numbers.

LEIGH.
LUTON.
LYDNEY INSTITUTE.
NEATH.
OLDHAM E. C. S. L.
PERTH.
RAWMARSH.
REDDITCH LIT. INST.
SOUTHPORT.
ST. HELEN'S (2).
SYDNEY, N.S.W.
TYNEMOUTH.
WIGAN.
WORKINGTON.
WALLASEY.

For New Libraries adopting an Indicator this is undoubtedly the best. It is not claimed on its behalf that it is of the widest adoption, for it is comparatively new. The advantages over the devices hitherto most frequently used are :

1. That it is much smaller.
2. The figures are much clearer.
3. Declares overdue automatically.
4. Lends itself more readily to statistical purposes.
5. Is quicker in operation.
6. Is cheaper and costs less to maintain.
7. Keeps clean and bright.

8. It does everything other Indicators do, and supplements them where they have proved weak.
9. Apart from its own Charging System, it is a device which shows in smallest space books IN and OUT. This Indicator is alone in adapting itself to any system of book-keeping or charging which the Librarian has in use and desires to retain.

FULL PARTICULARS, DIAGRAMS, AND ILLUSTRATIONS WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION.

In answering this advertisement it is desirable that you mention the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF WEST HAM

TO BOOKSELLERS.

THE COUNCIL hereby invite TENDERS for the SUPPLY of NEW BOOKS for the PUBLIC LIBRARIES for one year from March 31, 1901.

The books generally required will be the cheapest editions in cloth bindings, unless otherwise specially ordered.

The books are to be delivered, carriage paid, at the West Ham Public Libraries, within six days of the receipt of order.

Further Particulars and Forms of Tender may be obtained on application at the office of Mr. A. COTGREAVE, Chief Librarian, Central Public Library, Romford Road, Stratford, E.

Tenders, on printed forms only, to be enclosed in endorsed envelopes supplied with the forms, and to be sent to my Office not later than Four o'clock on Tuesday, February 12, 1901.

The Council do not bind themselves to accept the lowest or any tender.

By order of the Council,
FRED. E. HILLEARY,
Town Clerk.

WOODHOUSE (Ephesus, &c.).

TYPOGRAPHY AND MAPS.

The same care has been bestowed on the typographical arrangements of Volume II. as in the case of Volume I., and the system of cross-references, by which fulness of material is combined with economy of space, has been even further developed.

A marked feature of Volume II. is the large number of maps it contains. Most of these are coloured orographically to show heights, and in their execution a new method has been adopted which gives greater clearness in details. The coloured maps in the volume are:

AMMON AND GILEAD, EGYPT (two maps), GALATIA, GALILEE AND ESDRAELON, HEBREW GEOGRAPHY, JERUSALEM, JUDAH AND JUDÆA, MOUNT EPHRAIM.

Publishers' Circular

ST. DUNSTAN'S HOUSE, E.C.

February 1, 1901.

TO CUT OR NOT TO CUT.

A year or two ago the question whether the edges of magazines, reviews, and periodicals generally, as well as 'popular' books, or books intended to be popular and published at a cheap rate, should have the edges cut or not was discussed in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR. Soon afterwards, though not necessarily post hoc propter hoc, we were glad to find that of the number of six-shilling and other novels and cheap works a much larger proportion appeared with cut edges than previously. Then such important publications as the Spectator, Longman's Magazine, and the Revue des Deux Mondes, &c., appeared in the 'more easily accessible' form.

Since one of the principal objects of this journal is to help the sale of books and periodicals, we shall make no apology for endeavouring again to call attention to this question, feeling convinced, as we do, that the non-cutting of some publications is as prejudicial to their sale as would be the cutting of others.

But how are we to prove that not cutting the edges of novels and cheap publications and periodicals is prejudicial to their sale? Opinions differ, but we think it would be difficult to get stronger evidence than that of the experts on this question, who have kindly allowed us to publish their answers to our question on the subject.

Mr. John Shaylor, of Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., writes:

'I thought everything that could be said in favour of uncut edges for popular books and magazines had been said, but that was not much.

'I am decidedly of opinion that all fiction, juveniles, popular literature generally, and all magazines should be issued with cut edges. Publications of this kind are very often bought to read when going on a journey; nothing can make you feel more inclined to throw the book you have bought out of the window than to find it uncut—to use your finger or railway-ticket, or borrow a hairpin is not always convenient.'

Mr. Shaylor, it will be seen, writes not only from the point of view of one of the largest wholesale booksellers in the world, but also as a purchaser and reader.

Few people, we imagine, can have had such experience in the sale, direct to the public, of popular books, magazines, &c., as the manager of the Book Department of Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son. Here is what Mr. W. F. Kingdon says:

'I think I am in entire agreement with you about the cutting of edges of all popular publications intended for railway reading, and I have no doubt that the fact of one book being cut and another uncut will in thousands of cases every week influence the choice of the purchaser.

'Book lovers like to cut their books when they have a leisure hour and an easy chair, and probably a certain amount of cutting should be left for them in all books of the better class, even if the top is gilt, but I am sure that most people find it an irritating waste of time to have to cut their novel or magazine.'

We should like to have the opinions of some of Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son's bookstall clerks, who are so often asked in the rush of business to waste their time in cutting edges for customers. Many a time have we waited impatiently in fear of losing the train while some regular customer was having his Athenæum, or Temple Bar, or Scribner, or Blackwood cut up for him. It requires considerable force as well as a sharp knife to cut Maga and Temple Bar, their paper is of such tough quality.

Another of the 'heads' of Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son's great business, Mr. W. Faux, of the Library Department, writes from the librarian's point of view:

'My views are wholly in accord with yours. Novels of 6s. and under, also magazines, should always be cut, but care should be taken that the binders remove only the smallest shave. Books are greatly depreciated by ruthless cutting down. It is the abuse of the operation that induces the objection on the part of some book buyers to cut books.'

To publishers who are constantly sending out books for review we earnestly commend this expression of opinion from one of our leading reviewers. Mr. W. L. Courtney, of the Daily Telegraph, writes:

'There are, I believe, some persons who like to cut the pages of books while they read them. I confess I am not of that number, and to me it is a great advantage to find either a magazine, or novel, or book easily accessible. At the same time I should be sorry to say that any book or magazine is prejudiced in the judgment of the reviewer if the pages are uncut. And it must be remembered that the public at large not only read more slowly than but have different views from the reviewer.

'I should say, from some experience, that the numbers on both sides of this question are about equal.'

In view of the great numbers of books sent for review we are confident that ninety-nine out of a hundred reviewers will agree with Mr. Courtney in considering the easily accessible cut popular book or magazine a 'great advantage.'

As regards the general public we believe the great majority of readers of light literature ask themselves the question which Mr. Alfred C. Harmsworth once asked us, 'Why do publishers issue these cheap books and magazines in this imperfect state?—I want to read, not to cut paper; I know nothing more irritating than this senseless system.'

Messrs. John & E. Bumpus, of Oxford Street, are certainly well qualified to know what the public want, and they say:

'We are of opinion that the public prefer cheap literature in a cut state, but we would hardly go so far as to state that we think the sale is materially affected.'

There is a great deal of force in the warning Mr. Faux gives, that the binder should not be allowed to cut more than the merest edge of the paper, but, as Mr. Thomas Leighton points out to us, unless the printer is instructed to print the sheets so that the binder can fold them evenly, the knife will only cut some of the edges if but a mere shave is taken off. Mr. John Murray has the Monthly Review printed so that the binder can cut all with but a mere trimming of the edges, and the Nineteenth Century has for many years been published in this way.

Here is what Mr. Leighton says on this important matter:

16 New Street Square, Fleet Street,
London, E.C. 4.
January 29, 1901.

DEAR SIR,—In order to trim the rough edges from a book so that an uncut edge is preserved, the printer imposes the sheets so that the 'bolts' lie well back at the front edge of the folded sheets and avoid the trimming knife.

With papers of the consistency of blotting paper it is advisable to impose the sheets so that no trimming of rough edges is necessary. To effect this the printer should throw the 'bolts' well forward at the front edge of the book, quite level with or rather beyond the rough edges of the sheets of paper.

The rough cut edges introduced some years ago by Messrs. Methuen, and recently drawn attention to—no doubt from original inception—by Mr. Murray, is only an exaggeration of the latter method, the 'bolts' in this case being drawn out about a quarter of an inch beyond the rough edges of the paper, thereby allowing their removal by the trimming knife without interference with the other rough edges.

I trust this explanation is clear; it is rather difficult to avoid technical phrases altogether.

Faithfully,

THOS. LEIGHTON.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The death of the Queen has of course caused a great demand for books about Her Majesty, and many have been published already, as will be seen from our advertisement pages this week. (See pages 113 and 125.)

The most important article in the Monthly Review for February is that on 'The Outlook for British Trade,' an unanswerable plea for the establishment and maintenance of a perfectly equipped High School for Science—a Scientific University, in fact—by Sir Henry E. Roscoe. We hope it will attract very general notice.

Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. will publish immediately 'Queen Victoria,' by Richard R. Holmes, M.V.O., F.S.A., Librarian to the Queen—a new and cheaper edition, with a supplementary chapter, bringing the narrative to the end of Her Majesty's reign, and a photogravure portrait. The whole of the text, except the last chapter, was read to H.M. Queen Victoria, and was approved and authorised by her.

Apropos of Professor Sylvanus Thompson's lecture on 'Faraday,' delivered a few days since at the Urania in Berlin, it may be mentioned that Messrs. Cassell & Company are about to publish a popular edition of his book entitled 'Michael Faraday: his Life and Work.' It will form the first of a cheap edition in monthly volumes of the 'Century Science Series' edited by Sir Henry Roscoe.

Messrs. Jarrold & Sons will publish on Monday a popular memoir of Her Majesty under the title of 'Victoria the Good,' being true stories of the home life of Queen, Empress, Wife, and Mother, by Mrs. Clare Jerrold, a daughter-in-law of the late Douglas Jerrold. The work is published in two editions, cloth elegant, 1s.; paper cover, 6d. It contains a full account of the closing hours of her late Majesty, with pleasing portraits taken by Chancellor during her recent visit to Ireland.

Messrs. Methuen have taken over the publication of Mr. Eden Phillpotts's two well-known books 'Lying Prophets' and 'Children of the Mist.' They will be published uniform with Mr. Phillpotts's 'Sons of the Morning.'

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. have now ready a new and much cheaper edition of 'Popular Royalty,' by Arthur H. Beavan, author of 'Marlborough House and its Occupants,' with a photogravure portrait of Her Majesty the Queen, after a jewelled miniature painted by Mrs. Corbould Ellis, and nearly 50 full-page plates.

The Religious Tract Society publish the following popular books about her late Majesty Queen Victoria: 'Life and Reign of Queen Victoria, 1819-1901,' by Emma Leslie, illustrated, 1d.—a re-issue, revised and brought down to date, of the life of the Queen, which was so successful in the Jubilee Year. 'Pictures and Stories from Queen Victoria's Life,' by Mrs. O. F. Walton, illustrated, 1s. Her late Majesty Queen Victoria graciously expressed her approval of the former edition of this book, and suggested several improvements, which have now been made. 'Under Queen Victoria's Reign,' an illustrated sketch of British progress, 1837-1901.

Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. announce that they have made arrangements for the publication of a Life of the late Bishop of London. It will be written by Mrs. Creighton, who will be much obliged if any persons who have letters from the Bishop will kindly lend them to her. If they are forwarded to Mrs. Creighton, at Fulham Palace, S.W., she will return them in due course. Bishop Creighton had many occasional correspondents who wrote to him seeking advice or information on many subjects, and it is much hoped that letters may be forthcoming from this source as well as from the Bishop's regular correspondents. It is believed that materials exist for a volume of Essays and Addresses on literary subjects and for a volume on Church affairs, which last may probably be issued under the title of 'The Church and the Nation.' A volume of sermons will probably also be issued.

Messrs. Methuen are publishing a new edition of Mr. E. L. S. Horsburgh's 'Waterloo,' in which important alterations have been made. A note has been added as an appendix, and an index has been compiled.

At the annual meeting of the Buchanan Field Club Mr. W. L. Taylor, bookseller, Peterhead, the retiring President of the Club, read an interesting paper on 'Peterhead Literature in the 19th Century.' A condensed report will be found in the Aberdeen Free Press of January 25. At the close of the lecture, on the motion of the Rev. Dr. Stewart, a vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Taylor for his address and for his indefatigable labours on behalf of the Society. Mr. Taylor's paper is to be printed in full in the annual volume of the 'Transactions of the Society,' along with a 'Bibliography of Peterhead Literature from 1593 to 1900.'

Frank Allen, well known to the trade through his connection with Dodd, Mead & Co., White, Stokes & Allen, Brentano's, and, more recently, with E. & J. B. Young, is at present abroad, primarily to take a rest and incidentally to make business connections. Publishers here who may have plates, rights, or anything of the sort to offer to English or French publishers will find Mr. Allen a well-posted and reliable intermediary. He may be addressed care Brown, Shipley & Co., 123 Pall Mall, S.W., London.—New York Publishers' Weekly.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish immediately 'The Mind of the Century,' a series of essays by well-known authorities of a critical and retrospective nature, dealing with thought, work, and progress in science, literature, and art during the nineteenth century.

A new and cheaper edition of the late Mr. Grant Allen's 'The Evolution of the Idea of God' is to be published on January 29 by Mr. Grant Richards.

Among the new publications of the S.P.C.K. are 'The Official Year-Book of the Church of England for 1901,' furnishing a trustworthy account of the condition of the Church of England, and of all bodies in communion with her throughout the world; and many new books and tracts suitable for Ash Wednesday and Lent.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish early next month Mr. Frankfort Moore's new novel of society life, under the suggestive title of 'According to Plato.'

The next issue of the Ladies' Field will be a memorial number to our beloved Queen Victoria, and will be profusely illustrated with photographs and sketches taken at various ages and during important periods of her life. In addition, there will be reproductions of famous historical pictures and several special articles, including 'A Tribute,' by Lady Jeune; 'The Queen as an Artist,' by W. H. Whitley, illustrated with sketches executed by Her Majesty; and 'The Queen as a Horsewoman,' illustrated. The number will include a beautifully illustrated supplement with memoir of the Queen, and special fashions artists will contribute some exclusive designs for mourning toilettes. Price 1s.

The British Workman for February contains a full-page picture illustrating the House of Commons in session. Mrs. Amelia Barr's serial is continued. The number is well illustrated and attractive.

'The Preceptors' Bookkeeping,' by T. C. Jackson, B.A., LL.B. (Lond.), is in the press. The success of the writer's 'Practical Lessons in Bookkeeping' has encouraged the publication of a smaller and more elementary work. The smaller book will be found particularly suitable for the examinations of the College of Preceptors, London Chamber of Commerce, Junior Society of Arts, and National Union of Teachers.

'Victoria: Queen and Empress' is the title of the 'Memorial Number' of the New Penny Magazine—a perfect marvel for the money—64 pages profusely illustrated in a coloured cover.

Mr. Thomas Cobb's new novel, entitled 'The Bishop's Gambit,' was published on January 29 by Mr. Grant Richards.

A new star of considerable magnitude has appeared in that part of the literary firmament sacred to 'Pisces,' and has excited much interest in America, where alone it is visible at present; this is nothing to the excitement which will be caused in this country when it is known that the Americans have produced the finest 'Bibliography' of 'The Complete Angler' ever published, and that it is 'out of print,' or nearly so, before it is even visible above our horizon.

'The De Vinne Press certifies that in the month of September 1900, there were printed one hundred and twenty copies of "A Bibliography" of "The Complete Angler"; one hundred and two on Van Gelder hand-made paper, and eighteen on Imperial Japanese paper.'

The best edition is worth about 25s. a copy already, and the other double the price it was published at, or some £6 or £7 now.

The work is a small quarto of about 200 pages, and in addition to 'a chronologically arranged list of the several editions and reprints, from MDCLIII. to MCM.,' it is illustrated by eighty-six photo-engraved reproductions of title-pages of the 'Angler,' and an excellent copperplate portrait of Walton. In his Preface Mr. Arnold Wood says:—

'The author's original purpose in the preparation of this book was to enjoy the pleasure, to a collector of angling literature, of recording the results of his investigations regarding the history of "The Complete Angler." Recognising the possible usefulness of the work as a handbook for reference in identifying the various issues of that book, he has supplemented the chronological arrangement by the addition of an index of imprints, which he trusts will give the whole a further practical value to all admirers of Walton's charming pastoral. The title-pages which illustrate this book are in every case photo-engraved from the actual examples represented.'

This admirably got-up work is published by Messrs. Chas. Scribner's Sons, of New York. Mr. Wood, a member of the publishing house of William Wood & Co., of New York, is an enthusiastic collector, and we believe the whole of the title-pages have been reproduced from his almost unique collection of editions of Walton. He has done his work admirably, and there can be no question as to its value for collectors. The only omission we have noticed in the list of editions is that of the first issue of Pickering's noble reprint, edited by Sir Harris Nicolas, and first published complete in two vols. in 1836. This edition is the first given by Mr. Wood, but according to the Bibliotheca Piscatoria a good deal of the work had previously been published in parts, with Stothard's engraved title-page. Perhaps Messrs. Pickering & Chatto can throw some light on this part issue, and we shall be much obliged if they will do so.

A notable article in the Family Friend is that by the Countess of Aberdeen on 'The Activities of Women.' Mr. J. R. Griffiths, the well-known organist, contributes an article on 'Music in our Churches.'

An enlarged edition has been published by Mr. Ernest Nister, of the 'Empire Postage Stamp Album,' compiled by Mr. T. H. Hinton. In the new edition of this excellent album the geographical and other information has been brought up to date, new issues have been provided for, and changes made where necessary, as in the cases of the Orange River Colony and the Transvaal, now part of the British Empire. A new series of coloured maps is included and many new illustrations of stamps have been added—the best we have seen in many respects; the size of the album is 12 x 9½, the price 10s. 6d., and it will conveniently hold a great collection of stamps. The hobby of stamp-collecting deserves all encouragement, it is one of the best teachers of information as to the geographical position of different countries, their coinage, rulers, &c.

The Friendly Visitor has an article, accompanied by a portrait, on 'The Right Use of Leisure,' by the Hon. Emily Kinnaid.

A new play by Mr. John Davidson, 'Self's the Man,' was published on January 29 by Mr. Grant Richards.

Mr. Martinus Nijhoff, of The Hague, has just published Part I. of the 'Second Series' of phototype reproductions of original drawings by Rembrandt, edited by F. Lippmann, continued by C. Hofstede de Groot, 50 reproductions, mounted on card-board. This is a continuation to the famous collection of original drawings by Rembrandt published from 1888 to 1892, by F. Lippmann, in four portfolios, which contain 200 drawings. This supplement will be composed of 100 plates, to be published in two parts, the second part to be ready some time this year. Owners of the now very rare four volumes will be glad to complete their collection of the best reproductions ever made of these masterful drawings, and those who do not possess the first series should not lose the opportunity of securing at least the second series, which will, as the edition is limited to 150 copies, become shortly as rare as the first.

The following letter from the 'Hon. Secretary of the Society of Spiritists, London,' appears in Light:—

'We have received two or three messages from Florence Marryat—the first on the day of her funeral, and others at different times since then, during our materialisation séances. She stated that she hoped to communicate with us shortly, but that she would never materialise, as that was not a part of her work in the other life, but we understood that she would dictate a book to us of experiences since she crossed the river. She wished it taken down in shorthand, and we have made arrangements for this to be done.'

THE PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

A special meeting of the Council was held on Friday, February 1, for the purpose of adopting a resolution with reference to the death of Her Majesty Queen Victoria.

DEATH OF THE REV. H. R. HAWEIS.

Sadly sudden was the death on Tuesday last of the popular preacher and writer, the Rev. H. R. Haweis, who, only as late as last Sunday, preached three sermons on the death of the Queen, at St. James's, Marylebone. Mr. Haweis was born in 1838.

'Many will regret,' says one who often heard him, 'that they will no longer see that little figure, with the pallid face and lank black hair, limping, with his walking-stick, through a packed aisle to the pulpit, from which for so many years he has discoursed on every subject of the day. Among the varied topics which Mr. Haweis treated in a style peculiarly his own, perhaps the series which created the most interest was that on theosophy several years ago. But it is a proof of this unique preacher's versatility and originality that his church was as full on the last Sunday he occupied the pulpit as in the days when he first made a name through his quaintness and eloquence.'

He was at one time editor of Cassell's Magazine and 'Routledge's World Library,' and published the following books among others: 'Thoughts for the Times,' 'Music and Morals,' 'Musical Life,' 'Speech in Season,' 'Arrows in the Air,' 'Winged Words Current Coin,' 'Ashes to Ashes,' 'Christ and Christianity,' 'The Key,' 'The Broad Church,' 'Poets in the Pulpit,' 'Travel and Talk,' 'The Dead Pulpit,' and 'Old Violins.' As a musical critic he ranked among the best, and it is to him that the British public owe the introduction of Wagner's works.

He was the son of the Rev. J. O. W. Haweis, Canon of Winchester, and married a daughter of Mr. T. M. Joy, the artist, a lady who, previous to her death in 1898, was regarded as an eminent art critic.

'Who's Who' gives some interesting particulars respecting Mr. Haweis's career.

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

No. 3.—JOHN DUNTON, 1659-1733.

Unlike the two ancient shadows of whom I have endeavoured to give glimpses in the four preceding numbers of THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, both of whom, beginning life in poor circumstances, took the tide at flood which led them on to fortune, John Dunton began his business career in fairly affluent circumstances, but, omitting to catch the tide, the voyage of his life was bound 'in shallows and in miseries,' and ended in the Fleet prison. He was a bookseller who wrote many books instead of selling them, and he came to be looked upon as a sort of lusus nature by the great literary people of his time, and as an intruder; and so he was called a 'lunatick' by his contemporaries. Warburton described him as 'an auction bookseller and an abusive scribbler'; and the elder Disraeli notices him as 'a crack-brained scribbling bookseller, who boasted he had a thousand projects, fancied he had methodised six hundred, and was ruined by the fifty he executed.'

Among the many books which he wrote, the most curious and interesting was 'The Life and Errors of John Dunton, written by himself, in solitude, in which is included the lives and characters of a thousand persons now living in London.'

It is from this work that the main facts of John Dunton's life have been gathered by those who have written about him. Charles Knight says that he had waded for the third or fourth time through a volume of 700 pages, vilely printed upon the most wretched paper. It was published by R. Malthus in 1705, and was reprinted by Mr. John Bowyer Nichols in 1817. I presume the first edition is the one referred to by Mr. Knight.

John Dunton was born May 4, 1659. His father, grandfather, and great-grandfather were all named John, and all had been clergymen. At the time of our hero's birth, his father was rector of Graffham, Huntingdonshire. Losing his wife when his only child was an infant, the father, in a fit of despondency, went away to Ireland, where he spent some years as chaplain to Sir Henry Ingoldsby, having resolved not to marry again for seven years.

Meanwhile, by his own account, the little boy was left to strangers. He had been sent to school at Dungrove, near Chesham, but seems to have learnt little, and to have led an idle life, playing on the pleasant banks of the Chess, and rambling among the Chiltern Hills. His father on his return to England in 1668 became rector of Aston Clinton, Bucks, and married again. During childhood and youth he had several narrow escapes from death; on one occasion from slipping headlong into a river; on another, while playing with a bullet, it slipped down his throat to his breast, and, when nearly past hope, it suddenly bolted up.

John was now taken home to his father, who educated him with a view to making him fourth clergyman of his line and a faithful preacher of the doctrine of the old Puritans, but he was disappointed.

Young John, describing himself at the age of fourteen, says he was 'wounded by a silent passion for a virgin in my father's house.' 'My father,' he says, 'tried all the methods with me that could be thought of, in order to reconcile my mind to the love of learning, but all of them proved useless and ineffectual; my thoughts were all unbent and dissolved in the affairs of love.' His father's hopes that he should become a clergyman were destroyed by what he calls his 'unsettled mercurial humour.' He learnt Latin, but the difficulties of Greek quite broke all his resolutions. So the father, not finding his son inclined to learning, thought to make it his interest 'to be a friend to learning and the muses.'

At the age of fourteen, in the year 1673, he was apprenticed to Thomas Parkhurst, a bookseller, in London, 'a religious and just man,' and of whom he subsequently wrote as 'my honoured master, the most eminent Presbyterian bookseller in the three Kingdoms, and now chosen Master of the Stationers' Company.' From that time, says he, 'I began to love books to the same excess that I had hated them before.' His father died in 1676, giving young John his dying counsels, 'to know, fear, love, obey, and serve God, your Creator and Deliverer, as He hath revealed Himself through His Son, by the Spirit, in His Holy Word.'

During his apprenticeship he was again smitten by the charms of a certain young virgin, then lodging with Parkhurst. 'This romantic courtship,' says he, 'gave both of us a real passion; but my master, making a timely discovery of it, sent the lady into the country; and absence cooled our passion for us, and by little and little we both of us regained our liberty.'

There is a very curious old book which I have just seen called 'Three Hundred and Fifty Years' Retrospection of an Old Bookseller,' published in 1835, in which I find many of the anecdotes about Dunton which are to be found

JOHN DUNTON, 1659-1733.

By permission of Messrs. Chatto & Windus.

in subsequent books. He says: 'He made himself conspicuous in a political dispute between the Tories and the Whigs, being a prime mover on the part of the Whig apprentices. The Tories to the number of 5,000 presented an address to the King against the petitioning for Parliaments. The Dissenting party, with Dunton as their leader, made a counter-address, which they presented to Sir Patience Ward, then Lord Mayor, who promised he would acquaint the King; and then ordered them to return home, and mind the business of their respective masters.'

When his apprenticeship was just expiring he 'invited a hundred apprentices to celebrate a funeral for it, though it was no more than a youthful piece of vanity.'

He immediately started in business on his own account, occupying 'half a shop, warehouse, and a fashionable chamber.' His good father had advised him to use all possible prudence in the choice of a wife, and very wisely exhorted him to keep something more solid than investments in publishing speculations. 'Sell not,' said he, 'any part of your estate in land, if either your wife's portion or your borrowing of money upon interest may conveniently serve to set up your trade.' 'Even,' said the cautious father, 'if you shall, by some remarkable providence, meet with a wife of a considerable estate, you may by her portion set up your trade without mortgaging your land.'

It is evident that John Dunton had some capital at his disposal, and he soon made the acquaintance of what he calls 'hackney authors, who began to ply me with specimens as earnestly and with as much passion and concern as the watermen do passengers with oars and scullers.' His first venture was a work by the Rev. Thomas Doolittle, entitled 'The Sufferings of Christ.' 'This book,' he says, 'fully answered my end; for, exchanging through the whole trade, it furnished my shop with all sorts of books saleable at the time.' This method of exchange and barter must have been a very convenient method for a beginner not overburdened with capital. The success of this work and one or two others gave him 'an ungovernable itch for similar speculations.'

It was now urged upon John that he should marry, and many desirable young ladies were suggested to him. One was Miss Sarah Doolittle, in addition to whose personal charms and endowments there would be the chance of getting her father's 'copies' for nothing; 'his book on the Sacraments you know has sold to the twentieth edition.' 'At last,' as Mr. Roberts says, 'he met with Dr. Annesley's daughter, by whom he was "almost charmed dead" when he saw her in her father's meeting-place.' But this young lady was already engaged, so he was advised to make an experiment upon her elder sister, Elizabeth, and the result was marriage. By this marriage he became brother-in-law of the Rev. Samuel Wesley, the father of John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, who appears to have married Anne, the young lady who had almost 'charmed him dead.' It is supposed that Daniel Defoe, author of 'Robinson Crusoe,' married a third daughter.

His excellent wife became bookseller and cash-keeper, at the shop called 'The Black Raven' in Gracechurch Street, and, as Dunton admits, 'she managed all my affairs for me, and left me entirely to my own rambling and scribbling humour.' Here in 1685 he published 'Maggots; or, Poems on several subjects never before handled by a Scholar.' This work is said to have been written (at the age of 19) by Mr. Samuel Wesley.

Owing to the defeat of Monmouth at Sedgemoor, July 5, 1685, there came a great depression in trade in general and publishing did not flourish. John had a debt of £500 owing to him in New England; he decided to make a trip to Boston, taking a cargo of books with him. He procured storage for his venture in two ships; the one in which he himself took passage was the 'Susannah and Thomas,' and after a terrible passage of four months and many adventures on board he at length reached Boston, but whether the other ship ever reached her destination is not quite clear; at all events, poor Dunton seems to have lost half his cargo, valued at £500, which appears to have been cast away in the Downs. On his arrival at Boston 'he consoled his dear Iris' (his wife) 'by sending her sixty letters in one ship.'

He was absent from home nearly a year endeavouring to sell the remainder of his stock, but he found dealing with the four booksellers of Boston not very profitable, for, says he, 'he that trades with the inhabitants of Boston may get promises enough, but their payments come late,' and he found himself 'as welcome as sour ale in summer.'

THE GREATEST MANAGER ON EARTH.

(Concluded.)

THE MAJOR AND MR. SPURGEON.

On the strength, as he told him, of 'being a fellow-Baptist,' the Major wrote, while in England with Dr. Talmage, to the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, and asked for an interview, adding, 'If a note from you will facilitate my getting a comfortable seat to hear you next Sabbath, I would very much appreciate it.'

Spurgeon sent cards and two lines to say it would be a 'waste of time' for the Major to see him, as he was 'not at all in Major Pond's line.'

After hearing the great Preacher, the great Major wrote again, asking for an interview just to pay his respects, only again to be told by Mr. Spurgeon that though he felt sure he was 'one of the pleasantest men on earth,' it would only 'waste your time and mine for you to see me.'

In 1886 Major Pond revisited England with the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher. Surely he must have had 'his tongue in his cheek,' as the saying is, when he wrote this:

'Remembering the cordial letter Mr. Spurgeon had written me on my previous visit, I thought it no more than proper to drop him a line,' and ask if he might call and pay his respects, incidentally mentioning that he was visiting England with Mr. Beecher. To this Mr. Spurgeon replied:

'DEAR SIR,—I have, in as plain a manner as possible, on former occasions, declined to make your acquaintance, and I beg, with all courtesy and decision, to do the same again. I know your business, and I have no wish to enter upon it further. I can communicate with Mr. Beecher myself should I wish to do so.

Yours truly,

'C. H. SPURGEON.'

MATTHEW ARNOLD IN AMERICA.

There is an excellent portrait of Matthew Arnold on page 323 of Major Pond's entertaining book—in fact, most of the 91 portraits in the work are very good—but, according to the Major, all that those who went to his lectures got was a sight of him.

'Matthew Arnold came to this country and gave one hundred lectures. Nobody ever heard any of them, not even those sitting on the front row. At his first lecture General and Mrs. Grant were present. We had just heard the last few sentences of Mr. Depew's introduction when Matthew Arnold stepped forward, opened out his manuscript, laid it on the desk, and his lips began to move. There was not the slightest sound audible from where I stood. After a few minutes General Grant said to Mrs. Grant, "Well, wife, we have paid to see the British lion; we cannot hear him roar, so we had better go home," and they went.'

The Major quotes a charming letter from Arnold to his daughter in which he regrets his inability to make himself heard properly.

Judging from his portrait on page 368 there must be 'lots of fun' in Elbert Hubbard, editor of The Philistine. He certainly played a good joke off on the Major. Through Ian Maclaren (Rev. Dr. John Watson) Major Pond had induced the Dean of Ely to give a series of lectures 'to fill the demand which seemed to me had long existed in this country to hear from the platform one of the ablest lecturers of the Church of England.' In a number of The Philistine Mr. Hubbard wrote as follows:—

'I see that Dean Stubbs, of Ely, is out with a letter in the Pall Mall Gazette, denying that he ever said that Major Pond was the original David Harum. In this letter the Dean takes occasion to say his regard for the Major is very great, and further, that he fully endorses Hall Caine's project of placing in Westminster Abbey a memorial tablet to Major Pond. The leading literary men of England and several American authors have also made contributions for the purpose mentioned. All those who contribute will have their names on the tablet too, and beneath will be these words, "It is he that hath made us, and not we ourselves."

Major Pond adds: 'I was so elated to hear that the Dean had made nice mention of me, that I wrote to him, asking him to send me a copy of the Pall Mall, and here is his reply:—

'Of course I did not write a letter to the Pall Mall at all—on that or any other subject. I have not written a line about my American impressions in any English papers since my return, nor do I intend to do so.'

How deep is Major Pond?

VICTORIA R.I.

(IN HER CORONATION ROBES, 1837)

From the original Steel Engraving published by Messrs.
Dean & Son in 1837

Here is an entry from his diary after his tour with Ian Maclaren:

'He is a noble man. My heart is too full for utterance. Our tour has been a great success. In ten weeks we have cleared $35,795.91. This beats all records except Stanley's.'

Mark Twain urged Major Pond to get Mr. Rudyard Kipling to lecture. 'I am told he is the finest reader and interpreter of his writings of all of us. "Get him," said Mark, and the Major tried very hard to do so, but in vain; but he got two amusing letters. "I sent him," he says, "a complete set of his books, with a request that he favor me with his autograph in each volume (about twenty). He unpacked, signed, and repacked them.'

- This very interesting picture and souvenir of her late Majesty is sold by Messrs. Dean, well printed on plate paper, at 1d. each.

The wily Pond is deeper than appears on surface. He does not say how he got Mr. Kipling to put his autograph in the books, but from Mr. Kipling's letter advising their return we gather the Major had offered a subscription, possibly of a hundred dollars, to the Tribune Fresh Air Fund if Mr. Kipling would sign, &c.

This notice is longer than we intended or we should have liked to refer to the author's pleasant relations with Mark Twain, Sir Henry M. Stanley, Ward Beecher, Hall Caine, and many others, but the fact is when you begin dipping into Major Pond you cannot leave off—so many of his 'eccentricities of genius' come to the surface.

The volume has been handsomely produced by Messrs. Chatto & Windus and is sure to have a large sale.

THE COVER DESIGN OF 'CORNHILL.'

Who designed the admirable cover of Cornhill? We had always thought it was not only engraved but also drawn by W. J. Linton. From the current number, however, we find this was not the case. In his most interesting account of its establishment the originator of Cornhill, Mr. George M. Smith, tells us that

'The cover of the magazine, designed by Mr. Godfrey Sykes, a young student at the South Kensington Schools of Art, had the good fortune to strike the popular taste, and I still think it most effective. When I showed the sketch to Thackeray, he said, "What a lovely design! I hope you have given the man a good cheque."

Probably over twenty millions of copies of Cornhill have been printed since No. 1 was published in January 1860; millions of readers have admired the vigorous and graceful cover design, always cheerful and promising, and hardly one in ten thousand will have noticed the modest monogram of G. S.—unless you look for it it is lost in the general design.

The covers of Punch and Cornhill are perfect, and have never been equalled by any rivals. Mr. Smith tells us that the only complaint ever made against Mr. Sykes's design was that he had represented the sower as sowing with his left hand. 'But,' Mr. Smith points out, 'a sower uses his hands alternately. He goes down the row scattering with his right hand, and as he comes back he scatters with his left. I was in the country just after this criticism on the design appeared in the papers, and actually saw a man sowing with his left hand; and, of course, I made the most of the circumstance.'

It is forty years since that vigorous young ploughman on the top of Cornhill first put his hand to the plough—young and hopeful as ever he looks straight ahead into the future. If he stood still for a moment, and 'looked back,' he would wonder if the days of the plough in England are numbered, and its mark to be no more seen in our land.

IN MEMORIAM.

The DUKE DE BROGLIE.

Duke Albert de Broglie, one of the most industrious and successful of French historians, and, after the veteran dramatist, Ernest Legouvé, the oldest, by election, of the forty Immortals of the Académie Française, died at his residence, Rue St. Marc, Paris, on January 19, 1901. He was born June 19, 1821, the son of Duke Victor, who was descended from a long line of illustrious ancestors, three of whom had been Marshals of France, who himself played an important part in the reign of Louis Philippe, and died in 1870.

In early life Duke Albert entered the diplomatic service, but retired from it after the revolution of 1848, and began his literary career by writing political articles against the Second Republic and Second Empire in the Revue des Deux Mondes. We summarise his political career under the third Republic by saying that, from 1871 till 1885, he occupied from time to time more or less important positions, such as those of Foreign, Home, and Prime Minister, Ambassador to England, Deputy, and Senator.

In 1862 the Duke was elected to chair No. 14 in the French Academy in succession to Lacordaire. He was also a member of the Academy of Moral Sciences, to which he was elected in 1895 in the place of Victor Duruy. The late Duke was a most indefatigable writer, and was the author of numerous publications. The most important of these are the 'History of the Christian Church' and the 'Roman Empire in the Fourth Century,' and his series of essays principally composed from copies of diplomatic reports on the history of the foreign policy of France in the eighteenth century; 'Le Secret du Roi,' which came upon the public as a revelation of some parts of the reign of Louis XV.; 'Frédéric II. et Marie Thérèse,' 'Frédéric II. et Louis XV.,' 'Marie-Thérèse, impératrice,' and 'La Paix d'Aix la Chapelle.'

RETIREMENT OF SIR JOHN ROBINSON.

Sir John Robinson has been manager of the Daily News since 1868, and now, with its change of proprietorship, he retires with the hearty good wishes of all who have ever come in contact with him. Sir John was not only the manager, he was the maker of the Daily News, which under him has always been noted for its energy and enterprise in reporting great wars and other national and international events.

BOOKSELLING AT CARDIFF. FREE LIBRARY COMMITTEE AND ITS CONTRACTS.

AN INTERESTING POINT AS TO TRADE DISCOUNT.

(From the Western Mail of Jan. 30.)

A meeting of the Cardiff Free Library Committee was held at the Central Library on Tuesday night, Mr. Edward Thomas, J.P., in the chair. Tenders were received for the supply of books and magazines for the library. The Books Committee recommended the acceptance of the tender of Messrs. Howell & Co. as the lowest, the offer being to supply discount books at 35 per cent. off, net books at 15 per cent. off, and magazines at 17½ per cent. off.

Mr. F. J. Veall proposed that the minutes regarding the tenders for books be referred back to the Books Committee, with a request that they kindly consider the matter and advise the committee as to whether the present system of purchasing books for the library was the best that can be devised or whether it was practicable, after consultation with the Libraries Association and the Publishers' Association, to come to some better arrangement whereby a fair system of discounts to be allowed to public libraries could be settled and the orders distributed among booksellers who were rate-payers in the town. Mr. Veall proceeded to read a letter he had addressed to the Publishers' Association, in which he wrote: 'I am going to object to the acceptance by the Books Sub-committee (of which I am not a member) of a tender from a firm of Cardiff buyers for the supply of books to the library at 35 per cent. discount for ordinary books and 15 per cent. discount for net books. I am taking this course because I do not consider it fair trading in face of the terms and conditions of supply of net books to retail publishers by the Publishers' Association, dated January 1, 1900, a print of which I have before me in order that I may be perfectly accurate. I shall be glad if you will advise me if there has been any alteration in those terms and conditions, and also as to your opinion of the fairness or otherwise of such a quotation as I have mentioned to the legitimate booksellers and the trade generally. I am told that the firm referred to guarantee to deliver any books from any publisher as a library committee may require, and as I cannot believe the said firm is philanthropic enough to lose 15 per cent. on all the net books they will have to supply, and as under the terms and conditions your association will refuse to supply that firm at less than net price, I have made certain inquiries, and believe, on credible information, that the way it is done is for any firm acting as this firm does to buy books through a London agent, who purchases from the associated publishers ostensibly for export purposes, but really for the firms who undersell the market. The rules of the Publishers' Association, dated January 1, 1900, prohibited the sale to the public by booksellers of any net book at less than the net price, otherwise the net books would be invoiced at net prices.' Mr. Veall read the reply to his letter to the Association, signed 'Fredk. Macmillan, President of the Publishers' Association,' in which the writer, on behalf of the Association, expressed the hope that Mr. Veall would be able to persuade the members of the Cardiff Library Committee that although they might be tempted to obtain their supplies from an underseller with the thought that they were saving the ratepayers' pockets, they would in reality be working against the best interests of Cardiff and its inhabitants, for there was a danger lest the trade in books, instead of affording a reasonable profit to the men who embarked in it, was done at such ruinously cutting prices that booksellers could neither make a living nor afford to keep a large and well-selected stock. Now publishers, the writer proceeded, agreed to supply net books to retail booksellers at trade terms only on the understanding that they were re-sold at the full published price. In conclusion, the writer said: 'I hope very much that you will be able to persuade the Cardiff Book Committee to have nothing to do with Messrs. Howell & Co. We are writing to them to-day to point out that in offering to supply net books at a discount they have broken the conditions under which they buy at trade prices, and that unless their tender is withdrawn their supply of net books, either direct or through the wholesale houses, will be stopped. In this case I think they would find it difficult to carry out their contract.'

Mr. W. Symonds seconded Mr. Veall's amendment, which after discussion was lost, three voting for and four against. The recommendation of the Books Committee was then unanimously adopted as a substantive motion, with the addition of the following words, suggested by Mr. Ronnefeldt, 'subject to three months' notice on either side.'

A LETTER FROM GENERAL BULLER ON WAR POEMS.

Miss Cicely Fox Smith, the young lady who has recently published 'Men of Men, and other Poems,' has received the following letter from General Buller:—

'Downes, Crediton,
'Devonshire:
'Dec. 26, 1900.

'DEAR MADAM,—I am very much obliged to you for your book "Men of Men," which I received this morning. It contains some very spirited poems. You are quite right to immortalise Busaco, which I have always thought must have been one of if not the most desperate fights in the Peninsula.

'Yours very truly,
'REDVERS BULLER.'

TRADE GRIEVANCES.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR
AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow me as another bookseller to reply to that part of 'West End Assistant's' letter referring to publishers' direct supply?

The books so sold by publishers are usually those that the bookseller for reasons best known to himself has declined to keep. This is the case irrespective of their price being net or subject to discount.

To a large extent, if there is now a grievance on the part of the bookseller, it is due to his own unwillingness to stock particular books, and so he has either stultified his own business to the benefit of some neighbour, or educated his customer to go direct to the publisher, who, as a business man, having made an investment of his money in a book, naturally wishes for some return.

Most publishers, I find, try to cultivate amicable business relations with the bookseller by means of their travellers, circulars, and advertisements in such papers as your own. If the booksellers do not help them by stocking copies, is the publisher therefore to smile and let his money sink? I say he is not to blame when he supplies copies of his book direct to the public.

I recently declined a net book; therefore, having had my chance and refused it, surely I have now no ground of complaint against the publisher attempting to retrieve his own because of my unwillingness to share.

It seems to me to be continually occurring that the bookseller wants to receive all the benefit and take no risk himself. The publisher must advertise widely for the bookseller's benefit and yet apparently, according to your correspondent, as soon as an application for his book is made direct he must repudiate his own advertisement and refer to 'any bookseller' who may, or may not, have the book wanted.

I have no patience with this coddling process; it may be philanthropic on the part of the publisher, but it is likely to be detrimental to the quality of the bookseller.

That there are difficulties in our business must be admitted; but is it not equally so in all businesses? Surely the manner in which we grapple with such difficulties is our opportunity of proving effectually of what stuff as business men we are made. I for one think it is not creditable for us to be continually reading, in papers that are not confined to the trade, wheezes about 'how we cannot succeed' &c., because we are old-fashioned and will not keep pace with the times. (I do not spell it with a capital T.)

Apologising for the length of this letter,

I am, yours faithfully,
1901.

DOCTOR JOHNSON ON THE NET BOOK SYSTEM.

It may not be uninteresting to those of 'the Trade' who have not seen it, to read Doctor Johnson's opinion as to what their profits should be; the discussion arose out of the question why the profits derived from the Clarendon Press were so scanty:—

The booksellers, who, like all other men, have strong prejudices in their own favour, and are inclined to think the practice of printing and selling books by any but themselves an encroachment on the rights of their fraternity; and have need of stronger inducements to circulate academical publications than those of another; for, of that mutual co-operation by which the general trade is carried on, the University can bear no part. Of those whom he neither loves nor fears, and from whom he expects no reciprocation of good offices, why should any man promote the interest but for profit?

These remarks are not applicable to the University publications of to-day, perhaps, but they apply generally to all outside publications on which 'the trade' does not get fair allowance.

It is, perhaps, not considered through how many hands a book often passes, before it comes into those of the reader; or what part of the profit each hand must retain, as a motive for transmitting it to the next.

We will call our primary agent in London Mr. Cadell, who receives our books from us, gives them room in his warehouse, and issues them on demand; by him they are sold to Mr. Dilly, a wholesale bookseller, who sends them into the country; and the last seller is the country (or retail) bookseller. Here are three profits to be paid between the printer and the reader . . . and if any of these profits is too penuriously distributed, the process of commerce is interrupted. . . . We must allow, for profit, between thirty and thirty-five per cent.—between six and seven shillings in the pound—that is, for every book which costs the last buyer twenty shillings, we must charge Mr. Cadell with something less than fourteen. We must set the copies at 14s. each, and superadd what is called the quarterly book, or for every hundred books so charged we must deliver an hundred and four.

The profits will then stand thus:—Mr. Cadell, who runs no hazard, and gives no credit (?), will be paid for warehouse room and attendance by a shilling profit on each book, and his chance of the quarterly book: Mr. Dilly, who buys the book for fifteen shillings, and will expect the quarterly book if he takes five and twenty, will send it to his country customer at sixteen and sixpence, by which, at the hazard of loss, and the certainty of long credit, he gains the regular profit of ten per cent. which is expected in the wholesale trade; the country bookseller buying at sixteen and sixpence, and commonly trusting a considerable time, gains but three shillings and sixpence—and if he trusts a year, not much more than two and sixpence; otherwise than as he may, perhaps, take as long credit as he gives.

With less profit than this, and more you see he cannot have, the country bookseller cannot live, for his receipts are small and his debts sometimes bad.

Thus the good doctor, the son of a bookseller, gives advice, which, as he says, 'every man has not had opportunity of knowing.' Here is the NET BOOK SYSTEM, pure and simple. No nonsense about twopence in the shilling to the reader. Perhaps the chief objection to his argument is that he only gives five per cent. commission to his publisher with a possible twenty-fifth copy; but the object of his letter was to enforce a little common sense in the transaction of business, with men who are above knowing or caring what they do.'

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'The Minor Canon,' by G. Beresford Fitzgerald. The reader moves among a very unreal, unconvincing circle in this novel. Occasionally the action quickens into human interest, but the effort is never long sustained, and much commonplace detail follows. We do not remember Mr. Fitzgerald's previous works, a list of which is given on the title-page, but he has apparently something yet to learn in regard to the successful writing of novels.

From the same.—'A Wheel of Fire,' by Jean Middlemass. The action of this story commences somewhat slowly, but readers who have the energy to persevere will find themselves enmeshed in the interests of a mysterious murder, the perpetrator of which is not revealed until the close of the narrative. We cannot say it is the best of Miss Middlemass's novels we have read, but it at least exhibits something of the old dexterity and human interest.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'Saint Nicholas I,' by Jules Roy, translated by Margaret Maitland. The position of Pope Nicholas I. in the history of the Roman Catholic Church is one that has been warmly debated, even among the adherents of that faith. The aim of M. Roy's work is to relieve the prelate from the reproach of 'having built his claims on a lying foundation,' and he does this by showing that, even where his teaching and the False Decretals coincide, he always derived his doctrine from sure and original sources. The volume is divided into two parts, the first mainly treating of the general history of the Pontificate, while in the second Nicholas's actions and opinions in regard to the legislative, judiciary, and executive powers of the Papacy are considered.

From Messrs. Greening & Co.—'Northern Lights and Shadows,' by Ralph Graham Taber. The sketches here given are no doubt illustrative of life in the far north of America, but they are wanting in that artistic treatment of the subjects which would render them attractive in the eyes of the general reader. Occasionally one of the stories stands out from the rest by reason of its greater dramatic strength and human feeling. Such a story is 'God's People,' which tells of a woman's devotion to the Moravian mission, and how she came to be married under very trying conditions. There are one or two other readable tales, but speaking generally it may be said that the author has failed to make the most effective use of his material.

From Mr. Frank Hollings.—'Great Turnstile, Holborn.—The Bibliography of Coleridge: a Bibliographical List, arranged in chronological order, of the published and privately printed writings, in verse and prose, of Samuel Taylor Coleridge, including his contributions to annuals, magazines, and periodical publications; posthumous works, memoirs, editions, &c., by the late Richard Herne Shepherd, revised, corrected, and enlarged by Colonel W. F. Prideaux, C.S.I.' This bibliography was originally published during the summer of 1895 in Notes and Queries. Mr. Shepherd intended to reprint it, with additions and corrections, but was prevented by his premature death. The thanks of all lovers of literature are due to Colonel Prideaux for the able manner in which he has carried out and supplemented this labour of love, and to Mr. Hollings for the very attractive manner in which the little work is produced. The price is 5s. net; a few copies have also been printed on large paper at 10s. 6d. net.

From Messrs. Isbister & Co.—'The Religious Spirit in the Poets,' by the Right Rev. W.

Boyd Carpenter, D.D., Lord Bishop of Ripon. The life of a busy man is very powerfully illustrated by the papers composing this volume. They are, generally speaking, the product of hours spent in the railway train, when the author has been speeding to fulfil his episcopal duties, and there has been leisure for reading and writing. In the work thus undertaken, Dr. Boyd Carpenter exhibits the skill and experience of an old literary hand, and as we read our memory carries us back to the early days of the Quiver, now some thirty years ago, when he was a constant contributor to that and other religious periodicals. In his present essays the same cultivated graceful style is manifest as ever, gently leading the reader's mind into a refined and religious field of thought. The first three papers are devoted to what may be termed a general survey of the subject. They respectively treat of the 'Kinship between Religion and Poetry,' 'Religion and Literary Inspiration,' and 'The Genuine and Superficial Religious Element.' Then follow nine papers on the actual gist of the topic. The poets referred to are Edmund Spenser, Marlowe ('Faustus'), Shakespeare ('The Tempest'), Milton ('Comus'), Coleridge ('The Ancient Mariner'), Tennyson, and Browning. The volume is exceedingly interesting, eloquent in expression, and full of sound, wholesome teaching.

From the 'Joyful News' Book Depot, Milnrow Road, Rochdale.—'Down by the Western Sea,' by 'Old Cornish.' Though the reader may possibly find a slight want of variety in these character-sketches, and the dialect will prove a stumbling-block to those not to the manner born, there is much interest and humour in 'Old Cornish's' portraits. Some of the 'subjects' are remarkably quaint, and their original way of looking at things and the old-fashioned form in which they give expression to their opinions are highly amusing.

From Edward Lloyd, Ltd., 12 Salisbury Square, E.C.—'The London Manual,' 1901. In this edition of the 'London Manual' the work of the new London County Council is fully described, and the complete text of the Act under which they operate is reprinted. The book contains a complete and popular account of how London is governed, and all the information which members and officials of public bodies require, and which a householder needs in relation to the work of these authorities and his duties as a citizen. This includes information about the work of the London County Council, City Corporation, Boards of Guardians, Metropolitan Asylums Board, London School Board, and all the other numerous bodies whose work affects the welfare and comfort of five million people.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. (Cape Town: Mr. T. Maskew Miller).—'My Boer Host: a Night Adventure in the Karoo and other Songs of South Africa,' by A. Vine Hall. The author exhibits both depth of feeling and happy poetic expression in these songs. They are such as seem peculiarly appropriate to the soil of South Africa, having an unstudied grace and vigorous swing that is thoroughly representative of outdoor life. They are worthy to rank with the author's previous poems, and those who have read these will know that in saying this we are awarding high praise.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Une Année de Collège à Paris,' par André Laurie, adapted and edited by Fabian Ware, B.Sc., with notes and vocabulary by C. S. H. Brereton, M.A. This is one of the issues in the 'Siepmann's Elementary French Series,' and like all the volumes constituting this library it is distinguished by features which render it very suitable for scholarship purposes. The subject of which it treats—the life and spirit which prevails in a French lycée—is one that may be taken as interesting to all schoolboys, and thus in its study both instruction and entertainment are combined. As a specimen of a good healthy work, free from anything like mawkish sentiment, and revealing the tone and purity of the best modern French, nothing could be better. The notes also are thoroughly instructive without being pedantic, and the preparation of the book in every respect calls for warm praise.

From the same.—‘A Roman Singer,’ by F. Marion Crawford. This novel, which constitutes the latest issue in the new and uniform edition of Mr. Marion Crawford’s works now being published, is one of the most popular of that writer’s stories. From the time of its first publication in 1884, there has been a steady demand for it, and the book has been reprinted no less than ten times. In face of such testimony as this, it is needless to allude any further to its merits. We may draw attention, however, to the excellent printing and neat appearance generally of this new edition.

From Mr. John Murray.—‘The Painters of Florence, from the Thirteenth to the Sixteenth Century,’ by Julia Cartwright (Mrs. Ady). The Florentine School of Painting, to which Mrs. Ady pays a justifiable tribute of high praise, owes much of its excellence to the suitability of early surroundings. The Florentine artist had everything in his favour—perfect liberty, wealthy patrons to stimulate and reward his efforts, and a cultured public quick to recognise the evidences of true merit. No wonder that under these conditions the art grew and prospered, extending its influence over neighbouring provinces. The account of painting in these far back ages is extremely interesting, and the present volume is distinguished by the care and artistic insight which are to be expected from the reputation of the author. Every Florentine artist of note during a period dating from 1240 to 1564 is passed in review, and in the majority of cases an illustration pointing the distinctiveness of his style is given. The result is a most attractive volume, which should charm all students of painting, and at the same time extend their knowledge of art history.

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.—‘The Invaders: a Story of Britain’s Folly,’ by Louis Tracy. The plot of this highly eventful narrative is based upon a supposed invasion of this country by the French and Germans, and the moral would seem to be that, should they ever attempt this exploit, they would undoubtedly find themselves in a remarkably tight place. Nothing short of such a conclusion could, of course, be expected in a tale designed for British readers. In the first place the foreign allies, by a secretly conducted and totally unexpected movement, take possession of Manchester, Liverpool, Glasgow, Birmingham, and other large towns. It is certainly strange that the presence of so many thousands of Continental visitors, arrayed in long military overcoats (presumably to conceal their arms) does not attract something more than the mere attention of the railway officials, but that is a question for Mr. Tracy to settle, not us. Gradually matters right themselves. The British, completely taken by surprise at first, quickly assume the offensive; the navy performs wonderful feats of prowess; and ultimately the allies, deprived of their support from outside, are forced to an unconditional surrender. These highly sensational events are held together by the interest surrounding the doings of the chief characters, among whom are a gallant colonel and an equally brave boy of the street arab variety, who eventually receives the V.C. There are several illustrations to the volume, but we can scarcely compliment Mr. Lawson Wood on their execution.

From the Religious Tract Society.—The monthly magazines with which the name of this society is connected continue in their February issues to provide a well selected, interesting amount of reading. In the Sunday at Home two noteworthy articles may be mentioned in ‘A Sunday in Paris,’ by C. H. Irwin, and ‘The Relations between the Nations,’ by the late Bishop of London, while the editorial experiences of Mr. William Stevens, as revealed in the Leisure Hour, are replete with amusing passages. This gentleman also contributes a thoughtful article on Huxley, and there is an illustrated paper on submarine telegraphy, rather happily called ‘The Signal Haulyards of the Empire.’ The illustrations of both magazines, it is hardly necessary to say, are thoroughly up to the mark. The Boy’s Own Paper, the Girl’s Own Paper, Friendly Greetings, &c., excellently cater for their respective supporters.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—‘Eben Holden: a Tale of the North Country,’ by Irving Bacheller. There is a quaint charm about Mr. Bacheller’s work which it is not altogether easy to analyse. Something, no doubt, attaches to the phraseology, so picturesquely descriptive of thought and manners in the north of America, while in the personality of ‘Eben Holden,’ his shrewd deliberate method of expressing himself and queer fanciful anecdotes, there is much to interest and amuse. Still this but half expresses the attractions of the book. What these attractions more definitely are, the reader may be recommended to discover for himself. The story seems to have had a large sale in the United States, and in this country has now reached a second edition. It is a work about which a wide diversity of opinion is likely to be held, so much depending upon the tastes and disposition of the reader. For our own part, we have found it thoroughly enjoyable.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—‘Saint Antony of Padua,’ by Mrs. Arthur Bell (N. D’Anvers). The life of this venerated saint, which Mrs. Bell has collated with evident care from various larger biographies, is all the more interesting because for the most part little known. Commencing with an account of who Saint Antony was and the times in which he lived, Mrs. Bell takes the reader over the various events of his life, the eight years spent at Coimbra, his first sermon and its immediate results, his earlier miracles, work and influence as Provincial of Romagna, stay in Rome, and death and funeral. In conclusion two chapters are devoted to the canonisation of Father Antony and his after-death miracles, and the position occupied by the saint in Christian Art. The illustrations, of which there are some half-dozen, have been lent by the publishers of M. de Mandach’s volume, ‘Saint Antoine de Padoue et l’Art Italien.’

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—‘Conferences on Books and Men,’ by the author of ‘Pages from a Private Diary.’ Some of our readers may possibly have made acquaintance with these essays in the pages of the Cornhill Magazine, when they were no doubt charmed with their sagacity and humour. They are in very truth excellently adapted to dispel moroseness and to lead the mind into pleasant channels of thought. Roughly speaking, all human beings are by way of thinking themselves literary, and the belief that one has an accurate knowledge of mankind is deeply implanted in every breast; both these probably erroneous fancies are delicately encouraged by the author of this volume. He writes as one speaking to a reader who understands. This is very gratifying to the feelings, and promotes a mutual comfort. The number of topics touched upon is very large. The influence of natural science upon manners, Oxford wit and humour, a forgotten poet (Abraham Cowley), patriotic songs, the characteristics of a holiday number, the new criticism, William Cowper, the poetry of Chaucer—all these and numerous other subjects are passed under a species of philosophising review that is always interesting and frequently remarkably penetrative. The volume may be commended to the notice of all book lovers, and they will find much to ponder over and possibly dispute.

From Messrs. Virtue & Co., Ltd.—‘The Year’s Art, 1901.’ This is the 22nd annual issue of this most useful epitome of all matters relating to the arts of painting, sculpture, engraving, and architecture, and to schools of design, which have occurred during the year. A feature of this new issue is a series of full-page portraits of seventeen of the principal ‘war artists’ attached to the Illustrated London News, Sphere, Graphic, Black and White, and Times. No one interested in art can well afford to be without Mr. Carter’s excellent handbook. The ‘Directory of Artists and Private Art Schools’ is most valuable.

From Messrs. Whitcombe & Tombs, Christchurch, N.Z.—A very daintily printed book comes to us entitled ‘The Jubilee Book of Canterbury Rhymes,’ edited, with an introduction and notes, biographical and explanatory, by O. T. J. Alpers. The book is beautifully printed on hand-made paper. It contains poems by various writers arranged chronologically from 1850, the year of the founding of Canterbury, down to 1900. The selections are confined to the writers of this one province only, and the little volume ‘asks a welcome only on Canterbury soil and from Canterbury men and women.’ We recognise the extreme modesty of this request—we welcome the pretty volume notwithstanding. The following lines are from a poem written in 1861 by the Hon. C. C. Bowen. They are as inspiring as they are prophetic of the action of the brave New Zealanders of to-day:

‘When her warriors are fighting, as the bravest only dare,
For the birth-places of freedom, and the liberties of man,
Then New Zealand shall be there
In the van.
Young New Zealand shall be there—
Her rifles from the mountain, and her horsemen from the plain,
When the foemen’s ranks are reeling o’er
the slain.’

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—‘Morals and Millions,’ by Florence Warden. The contrast between the haughty aristocrat and the prosperous plebeian has always been a powerful weapon in the hands of the novelist, and the sympathy of most readers is quickly excited on behalf of the self-made man of genuine good qualities who is despised on account of his commercial surroundings by his better-bred neighbours. It is on this familiar theme that Miss Warden bases her present novel, and, though she scarcely seems to have made a close study of the more exclusive class she depicts, the members of which act and speak in a way that reveals little of their aristocratic descent, her story is yet interesting and readable. In merit, it is about on a level with most of the authoress’s recent works, and in concentration and vitality can scarcely compare with 'The House on the Marsh.' Sensational fiction, we are inclined to think, is better within Miss Warden's powers than the delineation of social life.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

* * * In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch = 2½ centimetres.

A Tribute to

OF

Victoria Regina

BY

MARIE CORELLI.

Small 4to. price 1s.

MESSRS. METHUEN have much pleasure in announcing the publication of this book which will be of profound interest to all classes of her late Majesty's subjects. It is an attempt to estimate the high and noble lessons of the Queen's character and reign, and particularly to describe those human qualities which endeared her to the lowest as to the highest of her people.

As the demand for this book will be very considerable, the publishers will be glad if orders are sent in as soon as possible.

BROKERS IN MANUSCRIPTS.

The work of a publisher of books is certainly interesting and often exciting—exciting because there are few matters about which there is such uncertainty as the fate of a book. Even in the case of a successful author it is never certain that his or her new work will repay the publisher. It often happens that what appeared an assured success is converted into heavy loss by some quite unforeseen circumstance, such as the outbreak of war, or the threat of war, or some national calamity like that we have so recently experienced.

Then there is always the risk that the popular author may write a book which falls far below the general level of his works; but, good, bad, or indifferent, the publisher has to agree to give the price asked if he wants to have it—and that too, in many cases, before even a line of the work is written. The fact is that many authors sell themselves soul and body to syndicates established to create a market for and deal in literary stock, on Stock Exchange principles. Is it a good thing for the best interests of literature that an author should sign an agreement to deliver a story of so many thousand words, so many specified months, or it may be years, ahead? We think not, and many authors will agree with us; for we have often heard an author regret that he had sold the children of his brain, before they were born, under such conditions that he was compelled to produce them, even when ill-health or other unforeseen circumstances made good work impossible.

We have, of course, nothing to say, per se, against authors' agents, or agencies or bureaux or syndicates; they have a perfect right to try to turn an honest penny as long as they do so in a fair way, but we may be permitted to think that they are bad for the best interests of both publishers and authors. Writing on this subject, a publisher says: 'I was once introduced to an author whose books I admired, and in the course of correspondence, some of it of a personal and confidential nature, I said that if there was any chance of publishing a book for him I should be glad, as I knew that his works were not confined to one publisher. The author said he should be delighted for my house to publish his next book, and referred me to what the Americans call a "book broker," a gentleman I had known for some years and occasionally done business with. I called on him, and soon found that the author had already sold his unwritten stories for two years to come through this agency. I explained to the manager that the author had expressed a strong wish that my house should publish his new work, and I showed him the author's last letter to me. "Yes! I have the correspondence here," the manager said, picking up what I could see were all the letters I had written to the author, pinned together, "but he has a way of saying that to all publishers who want his books," and my letters were carelessly tossed across the desk with a gesture which said plainly, "Mr. — may amuse himself by writing to publishers, but he leaves it to me to sell his books." What I felt about it was that it was a pity the author did not know when his works were sold, and that it was a little chilling to find that one's private and semi-confidential letters were regularly posted off to a third party, to be used as arguments for stimulating some other publisher to give more than he felt justified in giving.'

Publishing books would lose much of its interest if all books were sold to the highest bidder through a broker or literary auctioneer. Doubtless an author may in this way obtain larger sums at first than he otherwise would, but sooner or later publishers find that he is not worth the price to which he has been run up by the broker, and then there is a fall in that particular stock, as unreasonable, perhaps, as was the previous rise, but, unfortunately for the author, generally much more lasting.

The modern interposition of the literary broker, living on the commission he makes out of author and publisher, is naturally not conducive to the cultivation of friendly and confidential relations between author and publisher.

In its issue for February 2, Literature has the following comment on an article which appeared in our Educational Number on January 19:

'Enterprise should be encouraged in every branch of the book trade. Nevertheless, the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR was justified in complaining recently of the competition which has robbed many a good educational work of success. "No sooner does some new educational work or series promise to be a success than it is threatened with some rival, started with the sole object of supplanting it." The writer speaks of a possible congress of educational publishers "to consider if it is really necessary to exhibit against each other, to travel and push against each other, to undersell and cut out each other, on every possible occasion."

We may go a step further and suggest whether the time has not come for publishers to consider whether they cannot combine to check the absurd competition promoted by commission agents whose sole object is to run up the prices on which they are paid. Here is a not altogether imaginary instance of how the thing is worked. News comes that some previously unknown traveller has made a more or less successful journey in some unknown or little known country; immediately some 'Agency' or other sets to work to 'boom' the great traveller, after securing from him the refusal of an unwritten book on his adventures. Paragraphs begin to appear in the travel and literary journals; later on, columns are published in the daily papers about the wonderful journey, all emanating from the same source; then receptions and lectures are announced. Finally, when everything is ripe, whispers go round the trade as to a big American house having bought 'all rights'; this is promptly contradicted—only the serial rights and the book rights for America have been offered, there is still time for an English publisher to rush in, which he promptly does. He offers hundreds, the 'Agency' only laughs at him. 'Hundreds! my dear Mr. Brown—absurd! why, your rival Jones over the way has gone to four figures. Think of it, man, why there is going to be an exhibition of the great traveller's nightcap, which he never took off on that wonderful journey!' Then a telegram arrives: 'You are too late, Mr. Brown, Robinson has got it, and dirt cheap too—thousands down and a 25 per cent. royalty.'

Next morning Robinson wakes to find himself famous—most enterprising publisher of the day, and learns also for the first time that an illustrated edition of the book he has bought will commence at once in some magazine with a fabulous circulation.

In all probability the enterprising publisher who publishes the famous author's next great work will not be Mr. Robinson.

THE PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

At a special meeting of the Council of the Publishers' Association on Friday, February 1, convened by Mr. Frederick Macmillan, the President, the following resolutions were adopted and forwarded to the Secretary of State for the Home Department:—

1. The Council of the Publishers' Association, on behalf of the publishing trade of Great Britain and Ireland, desire to give expression to their profound sorrow at the loss which the nation and the Empire have sustained by the lamented death of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, and to offer to His Majesty the King and the Royal Family their respectful sympathy in their great bereavement.

2. The Council of the Publishers' Association humbly and sincerely tender their dutiful congratulations to His Majesty King Edward VII. on His accession to the throne of this great Empire, and assure him of their loyal wishes for the happiness and prosperity of his reign.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

With reference to the announcement of the publication of the 'Life' of Lord Beaconsfield, which appeared in the Athenæum last week, we believe that so far from Lord Rowton having finished it, his lordship has not only not done so, but does not intend to do so.

'The Life and Letters of Phillips Brooks,' now published in two vols. by Messrs. Macmillan, is the record of a preacher only less famous in this country than in the United States. The material for it was collected by the preacher's brother, Mr. Arthur Brooks, and has been arranged for publication by Prof. E. V. G. Allen.

Mr. John Long will publish in a few days Mr. Frank Mathew's new historical romance entitled 'The Royal Sisters'; also a new story by Mr. Fergus Hume, 'The Golden Wang-Ho.'

Mr. Henry Frowde, of the Oxford University Press Warehouse, sends us some Oxford copies of the Amended Book of Common Prayer, with the new Accession Service for January 22 annexed by Royal Warrant. This is 'to be used in all churches and chapels within this Realm, every year, upon the 22nd day of January; being the day on which His Majesty began his happy Reign.' The Prayer Books are printed and bound in the admirable style pertaining to the publications of the Oxford Press, and can be had with or without 'Hymns Ancient and Modern.'

Mr. Frowde also sends specimens of 'The Special Forms of Service in Commemoration of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria of Blessed and Glorious Memory . . . to be used on the day of the Funeral.'

These little leather-cased books will be treasured as a memento of the Queen.

'The British Imperial Calendar and Civil Service List for 1901'—containing, as it does, lists of both Houses of Parliament, baronets, orders of knighthood, Privy Council, foreign sovereigns, official departments of the State, the Army and Navy, the Church, the law, national, scientific, and commercial institutions, together with a host of other subjects of public interest and utility—will be cordially welcomed by all those who require such information in a compact and handy form. The General Index, and specially the Alphabetical Index to the Civil Service List, greatly facilitate reference and enhance the value of this reliable compilation.

Mr. M. L. Hutchinson, of Melbourne, sends us his usual 'Australian Almanac and Educational Register of Victoria for 1901.' The fact that this is the forty-second year of its issue is a sufficient proof of its continued usefulness.

Among the books in preparation at the Clarendon Press may be mentioned the following: 'The Peshitto Version of the Gospels,' edited by G. H. Gwilliam, B.D.; 'Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Kings,' by C. F. Burney, M.A.; 'Studia Biblica,' edited by W. Sanday, D.D., Vol. V., Part II.; 'Texts on Mt. Athos,' by K. Lake, M.A.; 'Samaritan Liturgies,' edited by A. E. Cowley, M.A.; Eusebius's 'Præparatio Evangelica,' edited and translated by E. H. Gifford, D.D.; 'Eusebii Chronicorum Liber,' edited, with facsimiles, by J. K. Fotheringham, M.A.; 'Latin Versions of the Canons of the Greek Councils of the Fourth and Fifth Centuries,' by C. H. Turner, M.A., Part II.; 'Sancti Irenæi Novum Testamentum,' edited by W. Sanday, D.D.; 'Legenda Angliæ,' edited by C. Horstman, Ph.D., 2 vols. 8vo.; 'History of the Church of England from the Abolition of the Roman Jurisdiction,' by the late R. W. Dixon, M.A., Vols. V. and VI.; 'Old Testament Lessons,' by U. Z. Rule; 'New Testament History for Schools,' Part I., by W. Stokoe, D.D.

Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. have now ready a twenty-page list of their books suitable for use during Lent.

A request from the Government for a large quantity of 'Letts's Diaries' for the troops in South Africa has just been received by Messrs. Cassell & Company, the special information contained in these having been found exceedingly valuable.

The next volumes to appear in the series of 'Oxford Classical Texts' will be: 'Platonis Opera,' Tom. II. (Tetralogiæ III., IV.), by J. Burnet; 'Xenophontis Opera,' Tom. II. (Libri Socratici), by E. C. Marchant; 'Ciceronis Epistolæ ad Familiares,' by L. C. Purser; 'Aristophanis Comædiæ,' Tom. II., by F. W. Hall and W. M. Geldart; 'Thesaurus Syriacus,' editio by R. Payne Smith, S.T.P., Part XI. (completing the work); 'A Compendious Syriac Dictionary,' by Mrs. Margoliouth, Part III.; 'A Dictionary of Vernacular Syriac,' by A. J. Maclean, M.A.; 'A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament,' based on the Lexicon of Gesenius, as translated by E. Robinson, edited by Francis Brown, D.D., S. R. Driver, D.D., and C. A. Briggs, D.D., Part X.; 'A Catalogue of the Turkish, Hindûstânî, and Pushtû MSS. in the Bodleian Library,' by H. Ethé, M.A., Part II.; 'Rāmānuga's Sribhāshya,' translated by G. Thibaut, Ph.D. ('Sacred Books of the East,' Vol. XLVIII., completing the Second Series).

The presidential address on 'Some Aspects of Bibliography,' given by Professor Ferguson, of Glasgow University, to the Edinburgh Bibliographical Society, has been printed in Vol. IV. of the Society's publications. But permission has been given for a limited edition on small paper being printed for sale to book-lovers outside of that circle, and the book will shortly be published by Mr. George P. Johnston, Edinburgh. Since delivery the address has been revised, and an appendix of illustrative bibliographies has been added.

Messrs. Jarrold & Sons, of London and Norwich, have published already a memoir of her late Majesty, entitled 'Victoria the Good, being true stories of the home life of Queen, Empress, Wife, and Mother,' by Mrs. Clare Jerrold, daughter-in-law of the late Douglas Jerrold. It contains some account of the closing hours of her late Majesty's life.

The Colonial edition of Nat Gould's new novel, entitled 'A Racecourse Tragedy,' illustrated by J. Sturgess, will be published next week by Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co.

'Democracy versus Socialism,' which its author, Mr. Max Hirsch (an Australian), describes as 'A Critical Examination of Socialism and an Exposition of the Single Tax Doctrine,' is at once an explicit refutation of the Socialist teaching as exemplified by Karl Marx's theory of surplus value and capital, and also the formulation of a revolutionary programme which will probably be accepted by many who vaguely style themselves Socialists. The work is published by Messrs. Macmillan.

Mr. Andrew Melrose, who has published the Examiner from its commencement, has resigned this position, and terminates his connection with the paper in a few weeks.

Mr. Wellsman, C.C., editor of 'The Newspaper Press Directory,' has been elected chairman of the City of London School's Committee.

Mr. John Long announces a new novel by Miss Nina Sandeman. The title is 'Veronica Verdant.'

* * *
'The Naulahka,' the novel of Indian life written by Mr. Kipling in collaboration with the late Mr. Wolcott Balestier—whose sister he afterwards married, and to whose memory are inscribed the verses prefixed to 'Barrack-room Ballads'—has now been taken over from Mr. Heinemann by Messrs. Macmillan, and will be included by them in the uniform edition of Mr. Kipling's Prose Works.

* * *
Temple Bar for February offers its readers plenty of variety. Besides the two serials begun last month, there is a paper on 'St. Helena, Old and New,' with special reference to the good treatment of the Boer prisoners and the recognition it has received; also a brief sketch of Stevenson at Davos, before his days of fame.

* * *
Mr. H. W. Lucy is no longer upon the Parliamentary staff of the Daily News. Henceforth the Daily Telegraph will, during the sitting of the House of Commons, contain as a feature 'Under the Clock: by One of the Hands.'

* * *
All interested in the great social questions of the day should read 'An Interview with the Archdeacon of London,' in the February number of the Humanitarian, which also gives an excellent portrait of the Archdeacon. The Venerable Wm. Sinclair occupies a position which, as he says, 'is no sinecure'; he knows London as few men can know it, and his strong outspoken views on Church and social problems ought to be widely known.

* * *
Mr. Frederic Carrel, the author of 'The Progress of Pauline Kessler,' is now engaged in reading the proofs of his new novel, 'Paul le Maistre,' which Mr. John Long will publish shortly.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1901.

THE PASSING OF THE QUEEN.

I fancy myself, of all the inhabitants of this great city, to be the only one who has voluntarily abstained from joining the great throng of mourners. The first reason is that I am old, too old for the hustle of a great crowd; and the next and most potent reason is that my two maid-servants told me they would surely die if they didn't go. I did not want such a terrible tragedy as that to happen in my house, so I said 'Go.' This morning I arose at my usual time, my breakfast was daintily prepared and a luncheon set aside for me, but my maids had gone; so now, on this dull and dreary morning, I find myself alone, my family all absent, and I shall not have a solitary being to speak to this melancholy day. Down yonder, within three or four miles of this spot, there are millions upon millions of my fellow mortals crowding and scrambling to get even a glimpse of the mournful cavalcade as it slowly and sadly passes along. I am here alone. All the inhabitants have fled; the postman's knock was the last sound I heard, now all is silent, and I am the last man, the only dweller in this village. All are gone, and the village is left to solitude and to me; but I am not quite alone—the door has just now been gently pushed open, and in marches my old friend Charlie—he is dressed in the deepest and blackest of mourning, as he always is, but now he is wearing a white ribbon with a large bow, as a mark of still deeper woe. 'Good morning,' he said in his usual way, 'how are you?' This has been his customary morning salutation for years, and, having performed it, he accepts a few caresses, solemnly turns round, and departs.

This morning, feeling the want of company, I invited him to take a seat by my fire; and there he sits cosily and purrs. 'Charles,' said I, 'I suppose you know that you are a very remarkable cat, you have been the victim of most cruel torture. You have been nearly skinned—you have been dipped in paraffin, and then set on fire; all your fur burnt off your body. Your skin scorched and bare—you have been worried and all but starved to death, and now, you sit there, the blackest, the sleekest, the plumpest cat in the parish. You are not proud and overbearing as most cats would be; you have a too vivid remembrance of your past tortures to be anything but humble and grateful now. Of course, you know that to-day you are mourning the loss of your and my good Queen, but I suppose you do not remember mourning for the death of any other King or Queen.

'Well! I do. But never before was there such a real heartfelt mourning as this of to-day. When I was a very little boy I wondered why there was a black border around the newspapers, and I was told that King George IV. was dead. Years afterwards, when I was a much bigger boy, came news of the death of King William IV. The newspapers were black-bordered, but people seemed to be far more inclined to rejoice that a beautiful young Queen was now to reign over them, than to mourn for the loss of the old King. I was a big boy when that blessed young Queen, whom we mourn to-day, came to the throne. There was a grand banquet given in our village, and I was among those who first shouted "God save the Queen!" How many millions of times do you think has that anthem been sung, and that loyal toast been drunk since that day?'

'Couldn't say,' said Charlie.

'I witnessed the young Queen ascend the throne, in all the splendour, grace, and beauty of youth; and now to-day, whilst I am talking to you, I can almost hear the tramp of those who are bearing her, the noble, venerated mother of her people, to her last resting-place.'

It was just about the time of the Queen's accession that I read in some magazine a dirge on the funeral of Sir Walter Scott, which had taken place a few years before—the author, I think, was Charles Swaine. I copied it out, and it is now before me in my boyish handwriting. There are some verses in the poem which seem to me to touch the present occasion. It is a singular poem in which all the leading characters of Scott's novels 'swept by'—at his funeral. I thought it a beautiful poem then, and I do not think meanly of it now—but I am not a judge. For aught I know, the poem may be familiar to most people, but I have never seen it in print, except in that old magazine:

'Twas morn—but not the ray which falls the summer boughs among,
When beauty walks in gladness forth in all her light and song—
'Twas morn—but mist and cloud hung deep upon the lovely vale;
And shadows like the wings of death were cast upon the gale.

For he whose spirit woke the dust of nations into life,
That o'er the waste and barren earth spread flowers and fruitage rife,
Whose genius, like the sun, illumed the mighty realms of mind—
Had fled for ever from the fame, love, friendship of mankind.

There was wailing in the early breeze, and darkness in the sky,
When with sable plume, and cloak, and pall,
a funeral train swept by;
Methought! St. Mary shield us well! that other forms moved there Than those of mortal brotherhood, the noble, young and fair.

The poem consists altogether of nineteen verses, in which the ghostly characters follow in the mournful train of the 'noble, young and fair.' I may quote one verse as an example of the procession of these ghostly mourners:

On swept 'Bois Gilbert,' 'Front de Bœuf,' 'De
Bracy's' plume of woe,
And 'Cœur de Lion's' crest shone near the valiant 'Ivanhoe,' While soft as glides a summer cloud, 'Rowena' closer drew,
With beautiful 'Rebecca,' peerless daughter of the Jew.

It is twelve o'clock—that grand mournful cavalcade must now be nearing Hyde Park. I hear the occasional booming of the minute guns; it is the only sound I hear. All else is dead silence here—the sun is just bursting through the mist that has hitherto hidden him, for surely he too is mourning for the PASSING OF THE QUEEN.

P.S.—Four o'clock.—The maids have returned, full of excitement—they never expected to get back alive—they were all but crushed to death—but they were determined to see the procession or die in the attempt—they were carried off their feet without touching ground for half a mile! and so they were borne into the Park through one of the gates, they knew not which—they got close up against the railings, and—they saw the whole cavalcade pass by within a few yards, 'most beautiful'—there were millions of people in the Park who had been there since five o'clock, who could not possibly see anything—all hats were off as the procession passed—they saw the King, and the Emperor, and the Queen, and Lord Roberts (exactly like their photographs), and the six cream-coloured horses draped in white lace—they saw the gun carriage and the beautiful coffin—they shed tears, they couldn't help it—never, never, have they seen anything like it before—never, never do they expect to see the like again—and now their bones ache, but they are happy. CUT OR UNCUT.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR
AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—If you care to have it, here is the opinion of 'one in the trade' whose twenty-one years of experience makes him detest uncut edges (especially uncut tops).

- 1st. Because of their nasty appearance when slightly soiled.
- 2nd. Because he cannot look into a stock book without cutting, and therefore cannot know its contents to offer an opinion on it to his customers.
- 3rd. Because, after it has been cut and on one's shelves for a time there is no better dust-catcher.

Yours truly,

ONE IN THE TRADE.

SIR,

Ye publishers may fret and fume
Of cut and uncut edges,
And you, ye knights of paper knives,
May flourish ivory wedges.
But 'tis the author's thoughts I want,
When I take up his tome,
Whether it be
By land or sea,
Or quietly at home.

It may be illustrated
With etchings fine and rare,
Or printed on 'Van Gelder,'
With all the printer's care;
It may be big and bulky,
Or dainty, prim, and flat,
But still, as Burns might have it,
A book's a book, for a' that.

Yours &c., J. P.

P.S.—It is the kernel, not the shell, where the value of the nut lies. So it is with books—not the format, but the force inside, that makes them sell.

[This outburst is from one of our correspondents—a well-known Nottingham bookseller. His verse is quite to the point, but our point is, that the uncut edges prevent one getting at the inside comfortably.—Ed.]

TO CUT, DECIDEDLY.

AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—Books at 6s. and under, and all magazines and newspapers, if issued with edges cut would find their sales materially increased. People who want their reading for a journey will not buy books and newspapers that require cutting. Time is money in the Manchester district. That is the experience of

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF
OTHER DAYS.

No. 3.—JOHN DUNTON, 1659-1733,

concluded.

On his return to England he found his affairs in a bad condition. 'He had become security' (says the D.N.B.) 'for his brother and sister-in-law' (presumably Mr. and Mrs. S. Wesley) 'for about £1,200, which caused him much trouble; he had to keep within doors for ten months.' 'My confinement,' says Dunton, 'growing very uneasy to me, especially on Lord's Days, I was extremely desirous to hear Dr. Annesley preach, and immediately the contrivance was started in my head that dear Iris should dress me in woman's cloaths.' Accordingly he went, and heard the doctor, but on his return he was discovered—I'll be hanged if that ben't a man in woman's cloaths! He bolted, and twenty or thirty roughs gave chase, but he eventually eluded them, and 'came off with honour.'

His confinement had now become so irksome that he slipped away and rambled through Holland. After an absence of some months he returned to London, November 15, 1688, and having now settled with his creditors he started afresh as a bookseller; on the day the Prince of Orange came to London he opened a shop at 'The Black Raven' in the Poultry. One of his projects, says Mr. Knight, was a decided success. He started the Athenian Mercury, the first number of which appeared March 17, 1690, and he kept on this penny tract of a single leaf till February 1696, when he proposed to publish the Mercuries in quarterly volumes, and of these, according to Mr. Knight, he seems to have issued nineteen volumes which Mr. Knight regarded as 'the precursors of a revolution in the entire system of our lighter literature, which turned pamphlets and broadsides into magazines and miscellanies.' The associates in the conduct of this publication, who called themselves the Athenian Society, were Richard Sault, a Cambridge theologian, Samuel Wesley, and the Rev. Dr. John Norris. The aim of the Athenian Society, which had, says Dunton, 'their first meeting in my brain,' was 'to advance all knowledge and diffuse a general learning through the many, and by that civilise more now in a few years than Athens itself did of old during the ages it flourished.'

Samuel Wesley was connected with him in several of his trade speculations; though they afterwards parted with irreconcilable hatred. 'I could not,' says John, 'be very maggotty on the character of this conforming dissenter; but, except he further provokes me, I bid him farewell till we meet in heaven; and then I hope we shall renew our friendship, for I believe Sam Wesley's a pious man.'

The original agreement between Dunton, Sault, and Wesley, for writing their paper, dated April 10, 1691, is in the Rawlinson MSS. in the Bodleian (D.N.B.). Mr. Knight says that Dunton was naturally proud of the success of his little periodical. 'Poems in its honour were written by the chief wits of the age.' The Marquis of Halifax perused it, and Mr. Swift, 'a young country gentleman, the haughtiest of mankind,' bowed down to it. He wrote a poem, of which the following are the two first lines:

'Pardon, ye great and far exalted men,
The wild excursion of a youthful pen.'

During the progress of this work, in 1692, he inherited an estate on the death of his cousin Carter. 'The world,' he says, 'now smiled upon me; I sailed with wind and tide, and had humble servants enough among the booksellers, printers, and binders. Now the master and assistants of the Company of Stationers began to think me sufficient to wear a livery.' He paid his livery fine of twenty pounds.

The licensing system was in vogue in those days, and Dunton gives a quaint account of 'the several licensers with whom I have had concerns.' The first on his list is Sir Roger L'Estrange,* and he is thus characterised: 'a man that betrays his religion and country in pretending to defend it; that was made surveyor of the press, and would wink at unlicensed books if the printer's wife would but smile on him.'

On the other hand, he says of a Mr. Fraser, that 'no man was better skilled in the mystery of winning upon the hearts of booksellers, nor were the Company of Stationers ever blessed with an honest licenser.' Of Mr. Robert Stephens, a messenger to the press, he says, 'I must say he never did me the least injury, for if I printed a book that had no license, I took such care to dazzle his eyes that he could not see it.'

Mr. Knight says of this licensing system, 'with all its tyranny and corruption it had one advantage; it did something to protect the copyright in books from piracy. The licensing acts and proclamations prohibited the printing of any books without the consent of the author, as also without a license.'

In the interval between the period when licenses of the press had ceased and the passing of the Copyright Act of 8th Queen Anne, there was no protection for literary property—a period of twenty years—and of course piracy was rampant.

Dunton mentions one Mr. Lee in Lombard Street, 'such a pirate, such a cormorant was never before known, copies, books, men, ships, all was one; he held no propriety, right or wrong, good or bad, till at last he began to be known; and the booksellers, not enduring so ill a man among them, to disgrace them, spewed him out, and off he marched to Ireland, where he acted as felonious Lee as he did in London.' There he might safely pirate. That Irish trade flourished more or less till the Union 1801 put an end to it.

Among the Thousand Friends described, he gives the name probably of every bookseller in London with a few lines of laudation to each one of them. Thus (modestly referring to himself) 'Mr. D—ton. He is happy in a very beautiful wife, and she in a kind husband; they have lived so happily since their marriage, that, sure enough, the banns of their matrimony were asked in heaven. Mr. D—ton may value himself upon his beautiful choice.'

If his description of them individually and collectively was not tinged with a liberal degree of exaggeration and flattery, London and provincial booksellers of to-day may well be proud of their predecessors of the latter part of the seventeenth and the first half of the eighteenth century. 'Never, certainly,' writes Mr. G. L. Craik, referring to Mr. Dunton's book, 'before or since were all the graces, both of mind and body, so generally diffused among any class of men as among these old London booksellers.' One is a man 'of very quick parts,' of another it is affirmed that 'for sense, wit, and good humour, there are but few can equal, and none can exceed him.' One is 'very much conversant with the sacred writings.' Another 'speaks French and Latin with a great deal of fluency and ease.' Another 'is familiarly acquainted with all the books that are extant in any language.' As to their persons, 'many of them are remarkable for their beauty,' their 'eyes brisk and sparkling,' 'of a graceful aspect,' and 'of a lovely proportion, exceedingly well made.'

* The 'Old Bookseller' says: 'In August 1663 Roger L'Estrange, Esq. (after more than twenty years spent in serving the royal cause, near six of them in gaols, and almost four under sentence of death in Newgate) had interest sufficient to obtain an appointment to a new created office under the title of Surveyor of the Imprimery and Printing Offices, together with the sole licensing of books &c.'

As to the provincial booksellers of his time, he describes only a few of them individually, but with a sweeping commendation which, it may be hoped, is deserved by their successors, now multiplied twenty-fold. 'Of three hundred booksellers now trading in country towns, I know not of one knave or blockhead among them all.'

Book auctioneers are also noticed by Mr. Dunton: 'The famous Mr. Edward Millington was one of them; he had a quick wit and a wonderful fluency of speech. "Where," said Mr. Millington, "is your generous flame for learning? Who but a sot or a blockhead would have money in his pocket and starve his brains?"' Dr. Cave was once bidding too leisurely for a book. "Where," said Mr. Millington, "is your Primitive Christianity?" alluding to a book the honest doctor had just published under that title."

In 1697 Dunton lost his wife, whose death he bitterly lamented; though, in the same year, he consoled himself by another marriage, with Sarah, daughter of Mrs. Nicholas, of St. Albans. With this lady he does not seem to have added much to his comforts or his fortune. The mother-in-law was a woman of property, who left some money to the poor of St. Albans; she quarrelled with Dunton, who complained because she refused to pay his debts. He left his wife soon after the marriage; he turned from publishing to book-auctioneering, and in 1698 was busy in Dublin with a cargo of books. He was in Ireland about six months, and during that time he had many quarrels with the booksellers, the story of which he related in a tract, called 'The Dublin Scuffle; being a Challenge sent by John Dunton, Citizen of London, to Patrick Campbell, Bookseller in Dublin.' In his 'Farewell to his acquaintances in Dublin, friends and enemies,' says Mr. Roberts, he has the satisfaction of announcing the disposal of the 'Venture of books I brought into this country, maugre all opposition.' His receipts were about £1,500.

'A worthy member of the House of Commons,' says John, 'did me the honour to say that I had been, by this undertaking, a great benefactor of this country,' and other gentlemen said that I had 'done more service to learning by my three auctions than any one single man that had come to Ireland these hundred years.'

Dunton said that during a short period he published no less than 600 books, and of this great number he only repented of seven.

The 'Life and Errors,' from which most of the information about Dunton has been obtained, was published in 1705. 'It is,' says Mr. Roberts, 'the maddest of all mad books . . . but its value to all students of the literary history of the eighteenth century can hardly be over-estimated.' He also gives a brief description of an immense number of books and pamphlets written by Dunton, even the titles of which my space does not permit me to quote. He had given up publishing a short time before he wrote his 'Life.'

One of his latest projects is 'An Appeal to George I.,' which he considered in some sense his 'Dying Groans from the Fleet Prison, or a last shift for Life.' He claims to have had a most distinguished share in bringing about the Hanoverian succession, 'the Pretender,' he says, 'having sworn that John Dunton is the first man he will hang at Tyburn if ever he ascends the British Throne.'

The last halfscore years or more of his life were spent in great misery. He died in 1738, in the 75th year of his age, but where and under what circumstances are not now known. The 'Old Bookseller' says that Dunton 'certainly threw more light upon the periodical publications of his day than any other writer. He appears to have laid the foundation of the plan upon which Mr. Nichols has so much improved.'

THE LATE MR. HENRY S. ELAND, OF EXETER.

Mr. Henry S. Eland died at his residence, 58 St. David's Hill, Exeter, on the 24th ult., after only two weeks' illness, although he had been in delicate health for some time and had rather a serious illness last winter. He was born on August 2, 1840. His father was a well-known Northamptonshire banker. In 1857 he was apprenticed to Mr. Colbran, of the Royal Library, Tunbridge Wells. After serving his apprenticeship he went to Messrs. Hamilton, Adams & Co. In 1869 he took over the old-established business of Mr. William Clifford at Exeter, which comprised bookselling, print-selling, stationery, newsagency, and library.

Ten years since a large well-lighted gallery was built at the rear, and the fine-art department considerably developed. In 1897 the front premises underwent great improvement, the first-floor being taken in and an oak gallery, staircase, and ceiling added.

Deceased leaves a widow, three sons, and two daughters. The eldest son is a solicitor with a London practice; the younger sons are serving their apprenticeship to the trade—one at Brighton the other at Birmingham—and they will eventually succeed to the business.

The business will be continued as hitherto. Mr. T. Percy Skelton, who has been with the late Mr. Eland for the last twenty years, has been entrusted with the management in conjunction with Mr. W. H. Middleton, who served his apprenticeship with the late Mr. Eland and has been with him twenty-four years. The business will be carried on under the style of Messrs. Henry S. Eland.

Mr. Eland represented the old St. Mary Major's Ward for three years in the City Council, and was some time churchwarden of St. David's, of which he was an old parishioner. He was unassuming and quiet in manner, but much respected for his straightforward and conscientious qualities. By his death the trade loses one of its most respected members.

DEATH OF MR. EDWARD HAWKINGS, OF PLYMOUTH.

With sincere regret we record the sudden death of Mr. Edward Hawkins, of Plymouth, who formerly for many years occupied the position of manager and publisher of the Western Morning News, and subsequently that of secretary of the Western Morning News Company. From the latter he finally retired in October 1899. Mr. Hawkins was a native of Plymouth, and in early manhood he spent some time in America, engaged (as he had been in England) in occupations connected with printing and journalism. Returning to England, he again took an appointment in Plymouth, but had thoughts of going back to settle in America, when the project of starting a daily paper in the West of England was mentioned to him by the late Mr. Walter Lethbridge. Other influential gentlemen co-operated locally in the scheme, and the leading part in the establishment of the Western Morning News, in 1860, was taken by the late Mr. E. Spender and Mr. W. Saunders. In Mr. Hawkins they and the directors who succeeded them had an energetic business manager, to whose faithful services the speedily assured success of the paper was in no small degree due. When Mr. Hawkins retired from the managership of the Western Morning News in 1891, he was succeeded by Mr. Ernest Croft, and when, in 1899, he also relinquished the secretaryship, Mr. Croft added that to his other duties, and now fills both positions.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Mr. George Allen.—'The Believing Bishop,' by Havergal Bates. It is not every reader of fiction who cares to be brought face to face with a social or religious problem in his literary relaxation, but for the more thoughtful Mr. Havergal Bates's novel possesses features of extreme interest. The story, however, is a sad one. The Rev. Albert George Rannsome, the young Warden of Muriel College, Oxford, whose hereditary instincts, environment, and early training have all tended to deepen his religious impulses, has his attention drawn, through the action of a student of the college, to the necessity of living the life that our Saviour would have done were He again upon this earth. Rannsome is made Bishop of Newcut, and there is every probability of his succeeding eventually to the Archbishopric, but, incessantly pursued by the conviction that has arisen in his mind, he is no longer able to enjoy the social advantages of his position, but throws everything on one side, more thoroughly to participate in the hardships of the poor. He resigns his bishopric, becomes a vicar in a crowded squalid parish, ultimately relinquishes this and opens a Mission Hall. Gradually he sinks lower and lower until in a poor white-haired man in a humble carpenter's dress none would recognise the once brilliant scholar of Muriel. Estranged from wife, children, all the friends he once knew, he still endeavours to carry out the mission of his Master. The story unfortunately leaves the problem unsolved, but it suggests material for deep reflection. It is very clever, but extremely painful.

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith, Bristol.—'Driscoll, King of Scouts,' by A. G. Hales, War Correspondent of the Daily News. Mr. Hales has given the reading public, in 'Driscoll,' one of the best tales of military life we have read for many a long day. It opens with the arrival, one broiling hot day, at Kranjee Junction, of a troop train, out of which slips Colonel Glasseye, a faultlessly attired British officer of the ornamental rather than useful type. He announces to three war correspondents, two Australians and one Scot, sprawling on a form smoking to keep the flies away, that he has 'come up to run a cordon round that beggar De Wet,' adding: 'It's about time we took him seriously.' To which the Scot rejoins: 'You'll have to take him seriously if you ever take him. Up to date he has done most of the taking.' This strikes the keynote of the book, which paints a vivid, or, more correctly speaking, lurid picture of the results of military unpreparedness and red tape. Colonel Glasseye is a thorough martinet, 'one of the type of officers who would sooner see the enemy cut off a convoy than allow a tent to be an inch and a half out of its perfect line.' Presently the assembly is sounded. 'There was a look of relief upon each seamy face. Anything, even a fight for life, was better than being slowly grilled to death in that inferno. But they were soon undeceived. Colonel Glasseye had only ordered them out for inspection, and the Tommies groaned as the sun bit into their blistering hides. . . . One of the privates so far forgets discipline as to tilt back his helmet to protect his neck, red raw with the heat, whereupon the Colonel wants to know why he does so, and, on being told, orders the Sergeant-Major to give poor Tommy two hours' pack drill, full kit, for want of respect to his officer. "I'll pull these fellows together," he adds. "Pull 'em to pieces," muttered the Sergeant-Major, as he marched away with his wretched victim—a victim of a system which makes a man a dunce, a devil, or a deserter.' Driscoll, or rather Captain Daniel Driscoll, of the Scouts, is in all respects a complete contrast to Colonel Glasseye. 'One was a fighting man from head to heel. The other a figure-head for fighters.' In reply to the demand of the three correspondents: 'Any news, Captain?' he replies, 'News have I none, ye quill-driving lumps av sin, but out in the camp which lies a mile and a half beyant the kopjes, I have three jhaars av rum and six bottles av whiskey. If ye feel loike comin' out wid me to dhrink to the luck av the British army, sure ye are wilcome.' And they do 'feel loike it,' and all gallop off to the Scouts' Camp, where the tale at mess is as good as a chapter out of 'Charles O'Malley.' But for this and much more we must refer our readers to the book itself, which is full of life and movement and picturesque description. Mr. Hales calls his clever book a romance of the war, but it is something more than a romance. Readers who have followed the movements of our troops soon see how much of truth far stranger than fiction may be found in this romance, from which many a lesson may be learned. Mr. Hales is absolutely impartial and does justice to the bravery of Boers as well as British. For all that, we gather that while the Boers wisely learnt their methods of fighting when warring with the Basutos, our War Office seems to have profited little by the experience so dearly bought by our troops during the last fifteen months.

From Messrs. G. W. Bacon & Co., Ltd.—'The Excelsior Shilling Atlas of Europe,' containing twenty general, four physical, and four historical maps in colours. This atlas, which is very nicely produced, has been specially prepared to meet the requirements of the Government Syllabus for the Certificate Examination, June 1901. One of the historical maps illustrates Napoleon's Campaigns.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'The History of Early Italian Literature to the Death of Dante,' translated from the German of Adolf Gaspary, together with the author's additions to the Italian translation (1887), and with supplementary Biographical Notes (1887-1899) by Herman Oelsner, M.A., Ph.D. Italian literature, with the notable exception of Dante, has no doubt to some extent been neglected by English readers, and there is justice in the complaint of Dr. Oelsner that Italian studies are at a low ebb in this country. The perusal of such a work as this should do much to arouse the student's interest. He will learn of the many phases of literature in Italy, prose and poetical, from the fifth to the thirteenth century; the French chivalrous poetry that was at one time so marked a feature in Northern Italy; the allegorico-didactic poetry and philosophical lyrics distinguishing the new Florentine school; and other instructive facts. Few works added to 'Bohn's Standard Library' have been better calculated to advance the student's literary knowledge, or to turn his attention into channels which he may more profitably explore.

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—'Old Mortality' ('Sir Walter Scott Continuous Readers.') We can scarcely be expected to regard with entire satisfaction the wholesale mutilation and abbreviation which Sir Walter Scott's noble work has undergone, even when such a process is supposed to be of advantage to the rising generation. For our own part we doubt whether, in any form, junior scholars will read with eagerness the adventures of young Morton and Balfour of Burley as they would do 'Ivanhoe,' 'The Talisman,' and 'Kenilworth.' The book is not suited to them in the first place—it is too full of broad Scotch and national distinctions; and in the second place much of the interest of the plot has been weakened by injudicious condensation and omissions. The notes, however, are thoroughly practical, helpful, and concise, and the introduction affords much interesting information in regard to the main incidents of the book.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Macaulay: a lecture delivered at Cambridge on August 10, 1900, in connection with the Summer Meeting of University Extension Students,' by Sir Richard C. Jebb, M.P. We are glad to see that this lecture, which details the main events of the celebrated historian's life, and submits to a fine analysis the criticisms passed upon his chief work, has been reproduced in more permanent form. It is well worthy of such distinction. While defending Macaulay from the attacks made upon him, Professor Jebb never becomes a blind partisan, and his judgment of the historian will generally be judged fair and evenly balanced by all unprejudiced critics. He concludes with these words: 'Macaulay's was a nature of rare sweetness, purity, and strength. He was affectionate and unselfish; a devoted son, and that under severe trials; a devoted brother, full of affection, and, at need, of self-sacrifice, towards all his kindred. He was free from envy, and from literary vanity. . . . In all relations of life he was benevolent and chivalrous. The record of his career may be searched in vain for a trace of meanness or cowardice, for an instance of deviation from upright and worthy aims.'

From the same.—Messrs. C. J. Clay & Sons, Cambridge University Press Warehouse, Ave Maria Lane, have published the Cambridge Prayer Books in a great variety of admirable bindings, with the Amended Prayers for the Sovereign and the Royal Family. They send us a copy of the 'Special Forms of Service' in commemoration of the Queen, of which great quantities were printed for use throughout England and Wales, 'and in the Town of Berwick-upon-Tweed.'

From Messrs. Cassell & Co.—On the 25th of last month Messrs. Cassell & Co. commenced the publication in monthly parts of a new serial of great interest entitled 'Mysteries of Police and Crime,' by Major Arthur Griffiths, one of His Majesty's Inspectors of Prisons, and also an author of some repute. Part I., which now lies before us, opens the subject in a very fascinating way, and promises well for the success of the enterprise. The greater portion of the number is devoted to a general survey of crime and its detection, some extremely interesting side issues being investigated. Following this, we have brief reference to some of the more notable wrongful convictions that have been recorded in history. Examples of these may be cited in Judge Cambo of Malta, the D'Anglades, the murder of Lady Mazel, the execution of William Shaw for the murder of his daughter, that victim of a gang of coiners Du Moulin, the famous case of the Calas family at Toulouse, &c., &c. The general production of this serial is excellent, illustrations, paper, and printing being worthy of the highest praise. Given away with the first part is a large Rembrandt photogravure of 'Claude Duval,' from the celebrated picture by W. P. Frith, R.A.

From the same.—'The Passing of the Dragon,' by F. Jay Ceagh. This is a very curious little book; its opening chapter, entitled 'There is no God,' introduces us to 'Sir Edward' and his butler, who find out that they have both come to the conclusion that there can be no God—or He would have heard Sir Edward's prayer for his wife, and He would not allow many things to go on in the world which shock the butler. In the second chapter a poor widow's sad story brings Sir Edward back towards the state of mind of his late wife—one in which there was 'no doubt or distrust.' Then Sir Edward's two little girls are introduced to the reader in 'a scene enacted in the dead of night.' Evie, one of the little ones, has the strange fancy of imitating Moses, who 'talked to God at the burning bush,' as she wants to get God to heal her father's broken heart; so she makes a burning bush out of a bit of holly and a candle, and her sister Dorothy is naturally frightened out of her wits to wake up and see Evie in her little pink night-dress walking round this burning bush. The dialogue of the children is natural and touching. In the last chapter the history and character of the devil is explained to the children in the manner usual with servants—and not only servants—as that of a ‘rampagious lion’; but we must not tell how he got killed and cured of his evil ways at the same time. The author calls his original little sketch ‘A Shadow Story about God’s Love, the Devil’s Guile, and the Imaginings of Children,’ and tells us that it is written for grown-up people only. It certainly stimulates thought on some of the mysterious problems of the metaphysical world.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.

‘The Paston Letters, 1422-1509,’ a Reprint of the Edition of 1872-5, which contained upwards of five hundred letters &c., till then unpublished, to which are now added others in a Supplement after the Introduction, edited by James Gairdner, of the Public Record Office. With photogravure portraits of Henry VI., Edward IV., Henry VII., and one of Caister Castle. The ‘Paston Letters’ are indispensable to the student of English history and character, and will be doubly acceptable in this new and very attractively got up edition in four crown 8vo. volumes, one of them being devoted to the Introduction and Supplement. The most celebrated of the Paston family was a great naval commander in the service of Henry VIII. In an engagement with the French he captured their admiral, the Baron de St. Blankheare, or Blankard, and kept him prisoner at Caister, near Yarmouth, till he had paid 7,000 crowns for his ransom. He served by land as well as by sea, and was with the Protector Somerset in Scotland at the battle of Pinkie. In Mary’s reign it is said he received the submission of the rebel Sir Thomas Wyatt. Henry VIII. called him his champion, Queen Mary her seaman, and Queen Elizabeth her father. In his later years he built a fine family seat at Oxnead, which was afterwards destroyed; but in the little church there is a fine marble monument to him. Horace Walpole had a great deal to do with the first very incomplete publication of the ‘Paston Letters’ in 1787; he said that for him they made all other letters not worth reading—very exaggerated praise, for many of the letters are dull and commonplace, and only of interest to the antiquarian or historian.

From Messrs. Dean & Son.—We have received the thirty-fifth annual issue of ‘Debrett’s House of Commons and the Judicial Bench,’ containing all parliamentary corrections up to January 22. This volume is a companion book to the well-known ‘Debrett’s Peerage, Baronetage, Knightage, and Companionship,’ a Royal supplement to which will shortly be published. The lamented death of Her Majesty Queen Victoria took place after this work had passed to press, but is referred to in the section ‘Occurrences during Printing.’ It is interesting to note the composition of the new House of Commons, which includes some 170 new members—more than a fourth of the whole House—142 gentlemen with legal qualifications, over sixty who hold or have held naval or military commissions, one peer, and some fifty-nine privy councillors, fifty-seven baronets, thirty-nine knights, forty-seven sons of peers, and thirty heirs to peerages. To render ‘Debrett’s House of Commons and the Judicial Bench’ a complete parliamentary guide, a condensed peerage is added, giving names of peers and their heirs, with their residences and clubs; also a full list of the Privy Council, and a section particularly useful to new members, entitled ‘Explanations of Technical Parliamentary Expressions.’ The Judicial Bench portion of the work includes detailed biographical notices of judges of the Superior and County Courts of the United Kingdom, recorders, vice-admirals of the coast, metropolitan and stipendiary magistrates, sheriffs of Scotland, colonial judges, &c. Appended to the biographies of many of these, as well as to those of M.P.s, will be found illustrations of personal armorial bearings.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—‘The Rule and Exercises of Holy Living,’ by Jeremy Taylor. Two volumes. Messrs. Dent have been well advised to add this work to their ‘Temple Classics,’ and in the neat form that distinguishes that series it should reach a large number of fresh readers. But would it not have been possible to publish the work in one volume? Of late we have noticed that some of the ‘Temple Classics’ have become perilously thin. At least the volumes might have been divided more evenly.

From Messrs. Downey & Co., Ltd.—‘Domestic Dramas’ (‘Drames de Famille’), by Paul Bourget. Translated by William Marchant. They are three admirable tales which make up this volume. It has been objected to M. Paul Bourget’s earlier manner by M. Charles Gidel that ‘Il décrit volontiers des scènes que les anciens romanciers ne faisaient qu’indiquer.’ This cannot be laid to his charge on the present occasion. The first of these stories—‘The Day of Reckoning’—tells of an old couple in comparatively humble circumstances who, apparently by strict economy and great self-denial, educate their only son for the medical profession, of which he becomes a distinguished member, only to learn that the money which has paid for his education has been fraudulently obtained. The dénouement must be sought in the book itself. The second story, ‘Other People’s Luxury,’ records the trials and struggles of a literary man to supply his wife with funds to keep up the position she feels herself called upon to maintain in society. The third and last, called ‘Children’s Hearts,’ is very simple, but also very touching, of a mother’s love for her child who dies, and ungrounded suspicions of two others who survive. The scene when she discovers the groundlessness of her suspicions that Guy and Alice hated little André is worthy of Dickens or Daudet.

From Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode.—‘The Child’s Guide to the Book of Common Prayer,’ by Ernest Esdaile, under the general editorship of Charlotte M. Yonge. This small volume, designed by its explanation of the Church Service to make the attendance at the House of God more palatable to children, is divided into fifty-two chapters, being one chapter for each Sunday of the year. Occasionally, the matter seems a little too advanced for small folk, and the style is not always of that simple character which would enlist their attention, but the book as a whole may be thoroughly commended, and the worthiness of its object is beyond all question.

From Messrs. Gowans & Gray, Glasgow.—Volume III. of their charming little five-volume edition of the ‘Complete Works of John Keats,’ edited by H. Buxton Forman. The volumes are published at 1s. each net, and we hope they will meet with the great success they deserve. In recording Volume II. in our New Book List we gave the name of the publisher as Mr. R. Brimley Johnson, who, however, only acts as London agent. Messrs. Gowans & Gray are the publishers.

From Messrs. Greening & Co.—‘Bret Harte: a Treatise and a Tribute,’ by T. Edgar Pemberton. This would have been a far better book if it had been a little more carefully balanced. Mr. Pemberton is much too eulogistic. If, instead of rhapsodising over Mr. Bret Harte’s many estimable qualities both as a writer and a man, he had given us more extended details of his life, with a well-considered criticism of his position in American literature, it would have been far better. Not, of course, that we would say the book is uninteresting. In fact, it is very readable indeed. But it gives an impression of flimsiness, of ill-considered judgment, and injudicious praise that is not worthy of its subject. It carries no weight whatever; it is simply the sprightly utterances of the flâneur. Taken as such, for the unprofitable enjoyment of an idle hour, it may be awarded high praise; but there are some people who, in a series dignified by the title of ‘English Writers of To-day,’ would have desired more. Among such people the present reviewer may subscribe himself.

From Mr. John Lane.—‘War: a Play in Three Acts,’ by William Heinemann. We do not know whether Mr. Heinemann would call his bright little play a comic tragedy or a tragic comedy, possibly the former, since the end of the heroine is tragic enough. The play is a clever skit on the red tape of the War Office and our general unpreparedness for war—especially for invasion. In the first act, Holland, espousing the cause of the Boers, declares war on England. The second act opens to the sound of cannon and rifles; the Dutch have beaten the Channel fleet and invaded England somewhere near Dover, in spite of the coast defences—or rather, we ought to say, because of them, if Mr. Heinemann’s information is correct as to there not being ‘a single modern gun in the defences of Dover.’ The only breech-loading guns in the fortress are ‘three obsolete old ship guns.’ A year or two ago, after a great deal of red-tape bother, we got an order to go over Landguard Fort, which is the chief protection of Harwich and Ipswich. No wonder the War Office does not care for the defences to be seen; the guns are ancient muzzle-loaders made twenty years ago. Quickfiring guns from a man-of-war would make the old monsters at Landguard Fort give in almost before they had a chance to fire.

From the same.—‘The Day Dream,’ by Alfred Tennyson, with illustrations by Amelia Bauerle. Like all the volumes in the ‘Flowers of Parnassus’ series, this edition of Tennyson’s poem is distinguished by the admirable method of its setting. Paper, printing, and binding are alike excellent, and in the matter of illustrations no more conscientiously up-to-date artist than Miss Bauerle could be found.

From Mr. John Long.—‘Australia at the Front: a Colonial View of the Boer War,’ by Frank Wilkinson. Brightly and chattily written, these records are certain to win the approbation of the reader, more especially as they treat of the South African campaign from an unfamiliar standpoint. Mr. Norman H. Hardy’s illustrations, taken from sketches and photographs by the author, also form an attractive feature of the volume and supply an added interest to the text. Mr. Wilkinson writes of many features in connection with the war, describes his first fight and the rather ignominious part he played in it, points out the anxiety of the newspaper correspondents to obtain early information and their endeavours to get the better of one another, comments on the different varieties of mounted troops, details the operations at Colesberg, shows the difficulties that beset the pursuit of De Wet; is always brisk, vigorous, and entertaining, never dwelling too long on one topic, but giving the reader a constant succession of animated descriptions. In regard to the question of Mounted Infantry, he says: ‘To my mind, Imperial Mounted Infantry, as at present constituted, can never be more than Infantry mounted. This may be regarded as a somewhat fine distinction by the English reader, but the difference will be detected by Colonials. In Australia a horse is an essential part of a Mounted Infantryman's equipment all the year round; in England he is only mounted for the purpose of a campaign, or at the most for a few months' training in each year. He is detached from a line regiment to do special work, and when that is over he goes back to the ranks. He can't be called a horseman by the wildest stretch of imagination.' Mr. Wilkinson goes on to say that he has often seen these men turning their steeds adrift, fully accoutred, in the hope that the 'accidental loss' would necessitate their walking rather than riding. The volume is full of pregnant criticisms quite as outspoken as the foregoing, and the author is evidently a gentleman who is in the habit of speaking out his mind. We hope that he always does so on sufficient evidence.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—The contents of the Century Illustrated Monthly Magazine for February are of such uniform excellence that it is a little difficult, and also unfair, to pick any special article out for mention. But we may be sure that for English readers Sir Walter Besant's final chapter on 'The Helping Hand in East London' will have many attractions. In the course of this he refers to the difficulty of administering charitable funds, and has a warm word of praise for the Charity Organisation Society. The article is well illustrated by Mr. Joseph Pennell and Mr. L. Raven Hill. The number, we should mention, is particularly strong in fiction, but scarcely to the exclusion of contributions of more solid interest. To Macmillan's Magazine Mr. Henry Fielding contributes a weird story of a ghost-haunted ship, the dread of the crew becoming so acute that they fight, panic-stricken, with one another like demons, and finally desert the vessel. But then she was laden with bones, which will account for the trouble. There are several readable articles in the number, more especially 'Rhodesia and Northwards,' by S. C. Norris, and 'Vital Statistics,' by Benjamin Taylor. St. Nicholas remains as ever one of the best illustrated magazines for young people. In its February issue the attractions of letterpress and illustrations are simply overwhelming.

From Messrs. Marshall Brothers.—'The King's Highway: a Journal for the Promotion of Scriptural Holiness,' Volume II., New Series. The general teaching of the papers included in this volume is all for godliness, and they should have much wholesome influence. The appearance of the magazine in regard to its paper, printing, and arrangement might be greatly improved.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'Platform, Pulpit, and Desk; or, Tools for Workers,' by Walter N. Edwards. In this volume are gathered 'one hundred and twenty-eight outline addresses on all phases of the temperance movement for all ages and classes.' In this respect it is a work of much practical value. The Rev. Canon Barker's introduction is short but to the point. Mr. Edwards, he tells us, has produced a 'little book of great ability which was much needed.' Nothing more requires to be said.

From C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.—'At Pretoria: the Capture of the Boer Capitals, and the Hoisting of the Flag at Pretoria' (a companion volume to 'Towards Pretoria'), by Julian Ralph. When the actual history of the South African War comes to be summed up, it will certainly not err from want of voluminous material. Books have been written about it, or rather constructed, from all points of view, and the difficulty of the future historian will be to select the information upon which he can safely proceed rather than search for such information for himself. Mr. Ralph's volume is as lively and up to date in its character as the illustrated cover that envelops it. He tells us in modern language, never wanting in vigour, of different aspects of the war, and his comments are invariably pointed and to the purpose. It may be mentioned that those portions of the book which have originally appeared in the Daily Mail, Harper's Magazine, and elsewhere, have in most cases been recast and extended. The book is not remarkable for great depth or literary style, but in the general raciness of its style it will no doubt meet the requirements of the age. It is, as we before said, thoroughly up to date.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'A Cuirassier of Arran's,' by Claude Bray. We have a distinct and favourable remembrance of the author's previous novel, 'Chattel or Wife?' but on the whole we think the present work considerably transcends it. There is a degree of excitement and vivacity, accompanied by a warmth of romance, in the nature of this young cuirassier's adventures that proves exceedingly fascinating, and the narrative is carried along with a vigour and swing that admit of no halt being called until the last chapter is reached. The scene is laid in the times of that bigoted incapable monarch, James II., and his deposition in favour of the Prince of Orange has no unimportant influence over the course of the story. The religious disturbances which distinguished the reign of James are also effectively introduced, and various public characters such as Lord Chancellor Jeffreys, Lord Sutherland, &c., make an appearance in the plot. Of course historical accuracy in a novel of this description is scarcely to be looked for, and the author is rather to be complimented on the dexterous use he has made of his real puppets than for any close adherence to actual detail—a rock upon which so many of his tribe have foundered. We can heartily recommend 'A Cuirassier of Arran's' for its brightness and wealth of spirited incident.

From Mr. Philip Wellby.—'Notes on the Margins: being Suggestions of Thought and Enquiry,' by Clifford Harrison. 'We are glad to see that a new and cheaper issue of these five essays has been ventured upon. The volume at its present price should appeal to a large number of readers who are interested in mysticism without being deeply versed in the intricacies of the subject. The aim of the book, as Mr. Harrison explains, is merely to suggest and to point to inquiry. It simply touches the fringe of the subject with which it deals. Regarded in this light, the volume will be found very interesting reading, and the reflections it will undoubtedly give rise to are likely to carry the mind into deeper channels.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'The Sack of London in the Great French War of 1901: being a Drama of the Twentieth Century as related by One Who Saw It.' The story is supposed to be told in 1951 by Sir Stephen Rock, a celebrated electrician, who was an active participant in the events recorded. The war, it may be explained, is between Great Britain on the one side, and France and Russia on the other. It arises out of the present complications in South Africa. The sack of London is not occasioned by the occupation of a foreign power, but through the terrible want of food. Eventually matters come right, and Great Britain emerges from the struggle greater and more powerful than ever. For those who like to hear of possible coming events, especially of a disastrous nature, the book will supply interesting reading; but, for our own part, we sincerely hope the author's prognostications will never come true.

NEW EDITIONS.—To their new complete library edition of Whyte-Melville's novels, Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. have now added 'Good for Nothing' and 'The Interpreter.' The first-named story, though not perhaps the most distinguished of the author's works, is very characteristic of his style; and of very pretty love-making, which never descends to the mawkish, it contains a large share. The author's tendency to philosophising seems, however, to be more marked than in many of his other works, and frequently it presents a distinct hindrance to the narrative. In 'The Interpreter' this feature is less pronounced, while in other respects the novel is quite the equal of the previous work. Both stories, indeed, are admirable specimens of the author's skill, and their manly, unaffected tone should charm the sympathies of readers as much now as it has done in the past.—Messrs. Greening & Co. have published a new edition of Thomas Moore's 'The Epicurean,' with an introduction by Justin Hannaford and illustrations by Will Smart. Some years ago, it may be remembered, Mr. Rider Haggard was accused of obtaining most of his ideas for 'She' from this work. There is certainly a similarity between the two stories, but not more than mere coincidence could account for. 'The Epicurean' is well worth reading, and the publishers are to be congratulated on its resuscitation.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

Author of 'Marlborough House and its Occupants.'

Royal 8vo. with a

Photogravure Portrait of HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN,

after a

Jewelled Miniature painted by Mrs. Carloua Ellis, and nearly 50 Full-page Plates.

Cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

Press Opinion.

"'Popular Royalty' is a happy title for a book which deals in an informal but well-intentioned manner with the personal charm and social life of the Queen and the Royal Family. . . . There are many simple but touching incidents recorded in these pages concerning Her Majesty's gentle but practical sympathy with old and young, and especially with wounded soldiers and crippled children."—STANDARD.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

THE TIMES says of R. M. Ballantyne's books: 'They were written avowedly for boys, but they have been caught up eagerly by readers of every age, old and young alike, and when once taken in hand have seldom been laid down again until the last page had been reached.'

*

Mr. J. M. BARRIE says of 'The Coral Island': 'For the authorship of that book I would joyously swap all mine.'

GAVIN OGILVY, in the British Weekly, says: 'No boy could be expected to respect another boy who had not read Ballantyne's bewitching book "The Coral Island."'

N.B.—The Half-Crown Edition will be continued as at present.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENTAL INQUIRY AS TO THE EFFECT OF THE INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT ACT OF 1891.

The United States of America do not give us copyright on quite the same liberal conditions that we accord to them. An American author gets copyright here simply by the act of publication here, provided that it is not later than the act of publication in the United States. For an English author to get copyright in the United States, not only must his work be published there not later than it is here, but the type from which the work is printed must be set up in the States—a condition which of course prevents the majority of English works being copyrighted in the States.

'Half a loaf is better than no bread,' and unquestionably the fact that our authors can obtain copyright in America has proved of very great value to all whose books have a ready market there, and any action on the part of the United States tending to weaken or destroy the value of what they have given would be very greatly to be deplored.

In this connection much interest attaches to the recently published Report of the United States Commissioner of Labour, in response to the resolution of the Senate, of Jan. 23, 1900, directing that official to 'investigate the effect upon labour, production, and wages of the International Copyright Act, approved March 8, 1891, and report the results of his inquiries.' The New York Nation, in noticing the report, says it extends to 99 pages, 77 of which consist of verbatim statements from publishers, leading printers, the American Copyright League, &c., giving opinions, pro and con., as to the effect of the Act in question.

THE COMMISSIONER OF LABOUR'S QUESTIONS.

The questions sent out were as follows: (1) Has the international copyright law been detrimental or beneficial to (a) publishers or book manufacturers; (b) compositors, pressmen, bookbinders, and employees generally; (c) American authors; (d) foreign authors; (e) the book-purchasing public? (2) In what respect has the law been detrimental or beneficial to each of the above-mentioned classes? (3) Has the effect of the law been to increase or to reduce the selling price of books? About how much per cent.? (4) Was 'piracy,' as practised prior to the enactment of the international copyright law, beneficial or injurious to printers or publishers? (5) Do American and European publishers exchange stereotype plates, or are European plates used to any extent in the production of books in America? (6) What is your general opinion as to the operation and effect of the international copyright law? (7) In what respects do you think the law in question should be amended or changed?

Fancy the great American Republic, after abolishing slavery at the cost of a bloody war, asking if 'Piracy' was beneficial to American printers and publishers. We are glad to say that a large majority of those who replied to these questions heartily favour the law; only a 'comparatively small but highly respectable number' are said in the report to be 'utterly opposed to the law, believing it to be pernicious in practice and wrong in principle.'

SUGGESTED ALTERATIONS IN THE LAW.

Whether favourable or adverse to the law, the individuals or firms represented favour certain changes in the copyright laws now in force, the principal alterations proposed being summarised as follows:

'(1) It is believed by many publishers that the "manufacturing clause," requiring the manufacture wholly within the United States of copyrighted books, photographs, chromos, or lithographs, whether the work of residents or non-residents, should be abrogated.

'(2) That the requirement of publication of copyright works in the United States not later than the date of their publication in any other country (which has the effect of requiring simultaneous publication on both sides of the Atlantic of the works of English [and American] authors) should be changed so as to allow a reasonable time to elapse between publication abroad and at home.

'(3) That the term of existence of copyright should be extended beyond the limited period now granted.

'(4) That the publication in the United States of unauthorised translations of copyrighted books of foreigners other than English should be prohibited.'

This last proposition would seem, says the Nation, to be adequately met by the provision in the present law, Revised Statutes, section 4952, as amended by the Act of March 3, 1891, reading as follows: 'And authors or their assigns shall have exclusive right to dramatise or translate any of their works for which copyright shall have been obtained under the laws of the United States.' What is desired, apparently, is that, in the case of books in foreign languages not now copyrighted in the United States by reason of the type-setting stipulation, the author or assignee should be allowed to secure copyright on an authorised English translation, to the exclusion of any unauthorised translation into English.

Of course the 'Pirates' tried to make out that the 'manufacturing clause' of the law requiring copyrighted works of foreign authors to be printed from type set, or from plates made from type set, in the United States, is violated to a considerable extent by the fraudulent importation from Europe of stereotype plates, which are used for the printing of such works in the United States. But the Commissioner was quite unable to obtain any proof whatever of this violation of the law. Then the 'Pirates' showed their true colours by wanting the Commissioner to believe that:

'The effect of the law is to confine the labour of production of each copyrighted work to the employees of the single establishment to whom the monopoly of publication is secured under the law, whereas, were it not for the law, the works of many foreign authors would be published by several different establishments, thus giving employment to a largely increased number of operatives.'

The italics are ours. We are very glad to see that there is every chance of the law being improved rather than abolished. American Literary Pirates of the Twentieth Century will doubtless be well looked after by the newly formed but powerful American Publishers' Association.

English printers, as well as authors and publishers, would rejoice if the 'manufacturing clause' were abrogated as is suggested, and it looks as if the movement for its abrogation has some chance of success.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

From the King's Speech :—

'Legislation has been prepared for amending the law of literary copy-right.'

We congratulate the Copyright Association and all interested, that literature was thus referred to in the first speech in Parliament of King Edward VII.

Messrs. Methuen are about to publish 'The Relief of Kumasi,' by Captain H. C. J. Biss. This book is a complete history of the recent campaign in Ashanti by an officer who was with the relieving forces. It tells the story of the siege, of the escape of Sir Frederick Hodgson, of the advance of Sir James Willcocks, and of his triumphant return. The book is fully illustrated by photographs taken on the spot, and has a map and plans.

* *

Mr. W. Durrant, of 'Durrant's Press Cuttings,' 3 St. Andrew Street, Holborn Circus, has made arrangements for supplying a limited number of albums, containing press cuttings relating to the principal incidents in the life of the Queen, including a full record of the funeral. The cuttings will be carefully selected from representative journals, and will comprise leading articles, descriptive accounts, recollections, illustrations, and portraits, &c., the cuttings being mounted in handsomely bound morocco albums, with inscription in gilt lettering, at £5. 5s. in full morocco, and £4. 4s. in half-morocco.

* *

The Pall Mall Magazine for March will contain among other articles 'Victoria, the Well-beloved,' by Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P., an illustrated article, accompanied by full-page plate portrait; a sonnet on the Queen's Funeral by the Duke of Argyll; and an interview with ex-President Kruger, his Views on the War.

* *

Mr. Richard Bagot, whose letters to the Times on certain aspects of Roman Catholicism will be fresh in the public memory, has written a novel based upon the difficulties arising out of a 'mixed marriage' between an English peer and a Catholic lady. It will be published by Mr. Edward Arnold early in March.

* *

A new edition of the First Series of Sir Herbert Maxwell's 'Memories of the Months,' which has been out of print for some years, has been prepared and will shortly be published by Mr. Edward Arnold. Advantage has been taken of the necessity of re-setting the type to give the volume a more handsome appearance and to make it uniform with the Second Series, which has achieved similar popularity to the First.

* *

'The Temptation of Friar Gonsol, the Story of the Devil, two Saints and a Booke,' is the title of an édition de luxe of Eugene Field's merry little stab at bibliomaniacs. Only fifty copies are to be published in England, by Mr. S. C. Brown, Kingston-on-Thames, printed on hand-made paper in black and red, with handsome ornamental initial letters, bound in real parchment, string tied.

We understand that the Journal of the Anthropological Institute, of which Vols. I.-XXVIII., published on behalf of the Institute by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., is for the future published by the Anthropological Institute, 8 Hanover Square, W. Volume XXIX., the first under the new arrangement, is now ready.

* *

The Lady's Review of Reviews is the title of a new monthly ladies' guide 'to everything of passing interest in the domestic, social, and literary world.' The Lady's Review of Reviews will consist of 64 pages, crown quarto. It will be published on the 15th of each month, price threepence, by Mr. John Wilson, at 83 Jamaica Street, Glasgow, and 5 Reform Street, Dundee.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

A hitherto unpublished romance by Gustave Flaubert, which was supposed to be irretrievably lost, is appearing in the Revue Blanche. The title of this story is 'Les Mémoires d'un Fou.'

The news that the last copies of 'La Vie de Jésus,' by James Tissot, published by the firm Mame of Tours, are becoming very rare ought to induce lovers of artistic publications to secure the English translation while that may yet be had. M. Mame have just issued the third volume of another magnificent art-work, 'Versailles et les Trianons,' by P. Gille and Marcel Lambert, on which they were engaged the whole of three years. The splendid plates to this beautiful publication and its excellent get-up gained for its publishers the grand prize of the Exhibition of 1900.

To students of the Faust-legend a work announced by J. G. Cotta'sche Buchhandlung, Stuttgart, entitled 'Goethe's Faust, erster Theil: Entstehungsgeschichte und Erklärung,' by Professor J. Minor, of Vienna, will be welcome, containing as it does a concise summary of all that is worth knowing of the growth and composition of Goethe's 'Faust,' its relation to the earlier adaptations of the subject, and its influence on Goethe's life in love and friendship, on which it is an exhaustive commentary. Another interesting Goethe publication of the same firm is 'Ottile von Goethe und ihre Söhne Walther und Wolfgang,' a volume of sketches giving in attractive and fascinating guise a description of how these two heirs of the great writer felt and thought, lived and died. The book concludes with a sympathetic letter from the reigning Grand Duke of Saxony.

The well-known firm B. G. Teubner, Leipzig, began with January the publication of two important monthlies, respectively entitled The English World, a Monthly Review; and La France, revue mensuelle, both edited by H. P. Junker, of Wiesbaden. These periodicals will, it is claimed, for the first time seek to give foreigners a general view of the English and French nationalities, to promote a knowledge of the languages and culture of those countries, to keep readers informed of their progress and development, and consequently to stimulate individuals to occupy themselves thoroughly with those departments which are congenial to them. Such articles will be given in the respective languages as express the sentiments, thoughts, and feelings of the English and French peoples in a characteristic manner, and thus pave the way to a better understanding of their character, manners, institutions, customs, and progress.

Hans Blum has written a romance of the revolutionary year 1849, entitled 'Aus dem tollen Jahre, Roman aus dem Jahre 1849,' which Carl Winter's Univ. Buchhandlung, Heidelberg, will publish this month. It is described as a simple story with a grand historical background such as could only be painted by one having a thorough knowledge of the history of the Revolution. Another work on Napoleon's captivity in St. Helena is published by E. Flammarion, entitled 'St. Hélène, Journal inédit de 1815 à 1818,' par Gourgaud, in 2 vols. The same publisher has ready a new volume by Drumont called 'Figures de bronze.'

'Friedrich Nietzsche der "Antichrist" in der neuesten Philosophie: eine Ergänzung zu meinem Werke "Der Triumph der christlichen Philosophie,"' by Mgr. Dr. E. L. Fischer, is announced by Verlagsanstalt G. J. Manz, Regensburg. The principal features in this work are: a very interesting picture of Nietzsche's life, character, and intellectual activity, especially in regard to his relations with Richard Wagner; a clear, comprehensive and systematic description of his philosophical development and view of life; and, lastly, an incisive criticism and conclusive refutation of his inimical position towards Christianity.

'Kamerun: Sechs Kriegs- und Friedensjahre in deutschen Tropen,' von Hans Dominik, Oberleutnant, with 26 plates and 51 illustrations in the text, and a map is published by E. S. Mittler & Sohn, Berlin. It is expressly stated that this is not a scientific work, but a volume of impressions and experiences during a six years' stay in the Cameroons. The most important of the contents are the account of the Abo expedition under Captain Morgen, the journey of exploration to Jaunde and in the Wute district, the Bakoko punitive expedition under Captain von Stetten, the combats with the Wutes and in the town of Ngilla, and the Wute-Adamana expedition under Major von Kampitz in 1898-9.

'Zwei Menschenalter' is a volume of letters and reminiscences, edited by Adelheid von Schorn, which embraces the experiences and correspondence of the famed Schorn family, who lived in the very centre of the art-life of Weimar. It gives a picture of culture from the thirties until now. Adelheid von Schorn was for long years the confidante of the Abbé Liszt and of the Princess Wittgenstein, and was privileged to enter into intellectual relationship with most of the leading personages of Germany and Italy. The correspondence includes letters from the Duchess Hélène of Orleans, B. Auerbach, F. Rückert, L. Bechstein, P. Cornelius, F. Kugler, Joachim, Raff, and others. Those of the Princess Wittgenstein throw for the first time a light on the peculiar relationship in which she stood towards Liszt. The publisher is S. Fischer, Leipzig.

According to the Allgemeine Zeitung, a life of the celebrated poet Ferdinand Freiligrath is in preparation by his daughter, Frau Freiligrath-Kroeker in English. It will treat at length of Freiligrath's long stay in England, for which Frau Kroeker possesses much material in the hitherto unpublished correspondence of Freiligrath with English and American friends, including the first Lord Lytton, Lord Houghton, and many other eminent men.

THE BOOKSELLERS' SEASIDE HOLIDAY HOME.

The Annual General Meeting will be held at the Sunday School Union, No. 56 Old Bailey, E.C., on Thursday, February 21, at 6 P.M., when all friends, subscribers, and members of the Bookselling Trade are cordially invited to attend.

TRADE CHANGE.

Mr. Nelson Mattingly will in future travel for Messrs. A. R. Mowbray & Co., of Oxford and London, as well as for Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.

AN APPRECIATION OF D'ANNUNZIO.

In his novels, there are no stories, only states of mind and pictures. On the one side it is a going back to the origins of the novel, in such 'confessions' as 'Adolphe,' for example; the novelty lies in the combination of what in 'Adolphe' is a consciousness vaguely placed in the world, a world absolutely invisible to us, with an atmosphere itself as much a 'state of mind' as Amiel's, and a universe as solid and coloured as Gautier's. His few personages are as little seen in their relation with society, as closely absorbed in their own sensations, as the single personage of Benjamin Constant, the man in whom one sees also the woman, as in a mirror. But with d'Annunzio, as he tells us in the preface to the 'Trionfo della Morte,' 'the play of action and reaction between the single sensibility and exterior things is established on a precise woof of direct observation.' Man, 'the model of the world,' is seen living in his own universe, which he creates continually about him; a world as personal to himself, and, to d'Annunzio and his people, as intimately realised, as the thought of the brain, or any passion.

D'Annunzio is an idealist, but he is an idealist to whom the real world is needful to the eyes, and feelings actually experienced are needful to the memory, before he can begin to make his art. All his work—all, at least, of his finest work—is something remembered, by a transfiguring act of the mind; not something which has come to him as vision, out of the darkness. With so personal an apprehension of the world, it is the world, always, that he needs, his soul being no world to him. In a monk's cell, or with dim eyes, he would have created nothing; he would never have been able to imagine beauty without a pattern.

But, to d'Annunzio, in that 'seemingly exclusive predominance in his interests, of beautiful physical things, a kind of tyranny of the senses over him' (that phrase of Pater seems to have been made beforehand for his definition) things seen are already things felt; the lust of the eye, in him, is a kind of intellectual energy. The soul of visible things seems to cry out to him, entreating a voice: he hears, and is the voice. At times, delicate human sympathies come to him, through his mere sympathy with soulless things: the sense of pity, which stirs in him over the fading of flowers, and so over the ageing of human beauty. He realises sorrow, because it is a soiling of the texture of life; death, because it is the end of the weaving. One fancies, sometimes, that his very feeling for art, for the arts of music, painting, literature even, is the feeling of one to whom these things are of the nature of ripe fruit, golden sunshine, a luxury of the senses, rather than a need of the soul.—ARTHUR SYMONS in the Imperial and Colonial Magazine.

On March 2,

it will contain, as usual, Lists of the Books to be published during the forthcoming season.

Publishers who have not already sent in a list of their announcements to the Editor should do so without delay.

Advertisement Orders, with Copy, should be addressed to The Manager, PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CUT AND UNCUT EDGES.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—I do not think that you will find 'opinions differ' among bookstall clerks as to the advisability of issuing all periodicals, magazines, reviews, and novels with the edges cut. A very large proportion of the travelling public do not decide upon their purchases at the bookstall until they have glanced through the contents of the goods displayed. Anything with uncut edges is therefore handicapped by being only partially accessible, and in the majority of cases is passed over. It frequently happens, also, that customers who require a particular publication, on discovering the edges uncut, decide upon something else rather than await the cutting up. Fortunately, the number of publications requiring to be cut are getting less, and this in itself is proof that the popular demand is for the 'easily accessible.'

I am, Sir,
Yours truly,
A NORTH DEVON BOOKSTALL CLERK.

Re NET BOOKS.

(Copy of a circular letter sent to Publishers.)

St. Mary Street, Cardiff:
February 7, 1901.

DEAR SIR,—You have probably received a circular from the Publishers' Association stating that we have entered into a contract to supply net books under net prices. In justice to ourselves we wish to point out that the only contract made by us to supply net books at a discount is with the Cardiff Free Library, whose estimated expenditure for books and magazines for the current year is two thousand pounds (£2,000).

It is our opinion that such large purchasers should be allowed better terms than an ordinary buyer.

Yours faithfully,
JAMES HOWELL & Co.

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

No. 4.—SAMUEL RICHARDSON, 1689-1761.

One of Mr. Richardson's biographers says that he was 'the most eminent man who ever stood behind a bookseller's counter.' I do not think he ever did so stand. He should more properly be called a printer. He was brought up as a printer; he became a printer of books, and doubtless his name appears on the title-page of many books. His first book of 'Familiar Letters,'* having been suggested to him by Rivington and Osborne, probably bears their imprint. His other books would doubtless bear his own name; indeed, his own name on a title-page as the publisher came to be regarded as a great honour. Thus Dr. Edward Young, who was an enthusiastic admirer, wrote: 'Suppose on the title-page of "The Night Thoughts" you should say, "Published by the Author of 'Clarissa.'"'

The term 'publisher' was rarely used in those days—the word 'bookseller' being generally adopted—and in that sense Richardson was one.

There has been so much written by and about Richardson that it is difficult to compress into a short sketch the material available from which to glean. Mrs. Barbauld wrote a biography of him as an introduction to his correspondence. This biography and the correspondence form the basis from which all subsequent writers have obtained their information. The last and most interesting work was published only a few months ago, entitled 'Samuel Richardson: a Biographical and Critical Study,' by Clara Linklater Thomson.

Samuel Richardson was born in a Derbyshire village in the year 1689, but for some reason he always avoided mentioning the name of the town or village, and, to this day, Derbyshire may as a county claim the honour of owning his birthplace, but it cannot identify the spot where the author of 'Clarissa' first saw the light of day. His father was a carpenter and joiner by trade, with some knowledge of architecture. He had been employed by the Duke of Monmouth and the first Earl of Shaftesbury; and on this account, at the time of Monmouth's fall, suspicion of his loyalty fell upon him; he closed his business in London, and retired to this mysterious village in Derbyshire. It was no joke in Chief Justice Jeffreys's days of authority to come under suspicion; for he might have been sent to the gallows, or to the plantations across the Atlantic. This possibly explains Richardson's reticence about his native village.

Samuel, one of nine children, was intended for the Church, but heavy losses obliged his father to abandon his thought of making his ingenious son a parson, and he had him bound apprentice to a printer instead. He is said to have been for a time at Christ's Hospital, but his name does not appear in the school registers. In any case he never attained more than a smattering of the learned languages.

Mrs. Barbauld states that when Richardson was an old man (1753) he received a letter from a Dutch clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Stinstra, who had translated 'Clarissa,' as follows: 'May I ask you (although I am too bold, my letter blushes not) in what kind of life you have been conversant in your youth? Have you, as fame reports, been constantly employed in book-selling? Whence did you attain so accurate a knowledge of the various dispositions of nature and of the manners of mankind? By what means have you compiled your immortal works?' &c., &c.

* This volume of 'Familiar Letters' seems to have been published at first anonymously, and it was not till after the author's death that his name appears on the title-page. It is not included in the Bibliography given by Mrs. Thomson at the end of her work, but she mentions it as preceding 'Pamela.'

To these flattering inquiries the author replies without reserve as to the facts of his early life. 'I was not eleven years old,' he says, 'when I wrote spontaneously a letter to a widow of nearly fifty, who, pretending to a zeal for religion, and being a constant frequenter of Church ordinances, was continually fomenting quarrels and disturbances, by backbiting and scandal among all her acquaintances. I collected, from Scripture, texts that made against her. Assuming the style and address of a person in years, I exhorted her, I expostulated with her. But my handwriting was known; I was challenged with it, and owned the boldness, for she complained to my mother with tears. . . . My mother, however, commended my principles, though she censured the liberty I had taken.'

It was at the ripe age of thirteen that he became a writer of love-letters for the girls in his neighbourhood. 'A bashful and not forward boy,' he says, 'I was an early favourite with all the young women of taste and reading in the neighbourhood. Half a dozen of them, when met together with their needles, used, when they got a book they liked, to borrow me to read to them. . . . I was not more than thirteen when three of these young women, unknown to each other, having a high opinion of my taciturnity, revealed to me their love secrets, in order to induce me to give them copies to write after, or correct, for answers to their lovers' letters; nor did any of them ever know that I was the secretary to the others. . . . One, highly satisfied with her lover's fervour and vows of everlasting love, has said when I have asked her directions: "I cannot tell you what to write, but" (her heart on her lips) "you cannot write too kindly."'

Thus it was in those early days that he laid the foundation for that intimate knowledge of the intricacies of the feminine side of human nature, which is so abundantly displayed in his three great works of fiction.

Like Dunton he was intended for the Church, but the Fates ordained that he should be a publisher and printer. When he was seventeen years old, in 1706, he was bound apprentice to Mr. John Wilde, who, according to Dunton, had 'a very noble printing house in Aldersgate Street.' Referring to this period of his life, Richardson writes: 'I served a diligent seven years to it; to a master who grudged every hour to me that tended to his profit; even of those times of leisure and diversion which the refractoriness of my fellow-apprentices obliged him to allow them, and were usually allowed by other masters to their apprentices. I stole from the hours of rest and relaxation my reading times for the improvement of my mind. I took care that even the candle was of my own purchasing, that I might not, in the most trifling instance, make my master a sufferer.'

After the expiration of his apprenticeship with this hard task-master, he worked for some years as a compositor, a reader, and as overseer. In 1719 he took up his freedom, and became a master printer in a small way in a court off Fleet Street. He afterwards removed to Salisbury Square. It was in 1724 that another future literary celebrity came to work with him as a compositor. Thomas Gent, in the 'Story of his Life,'* says: 'Mr. Woodfall was so kind to recommend me to the ingenious Mr. Richardson, in Salisbury Court, with whom I staid to finish his part of the Dictionary, which he had from the booksellers—composed of English, Latin, Greek, and Hebrew.'

Richardson had not only worked as a compositor, but he added to his income by compiling indexes and writing prefaces and 'honest dedications.'

'His knowledge of the heart of man was probably extended,' says Mr. Knight, 'by his acquaintance with the clever and profligate Duke of Wharton, for whom he printed the True Briton, but he withdrew from it after the publication of the sixth number, and so escaped prosecution.'

Two years after he started in business he married—in 1726—Martha, daughter of Allington Wilde, of Aldersgate Street—so says Mrs. Barbauld (quoting Nichols), 'whom,' says the D.N.B., 'she confuses with his master John Wilde,' but in this instance the D.N.B. seems to be mistaken, for I notice that Clara L. Thomson, in the very interesting work she has just published, shows pretty clearly that Richardson, after all, did 'carry out his resemblance to the industrious apprentice, by marrying his master's daughter.' She found in the registers of Charterhouse Chapel, under date 1692, that John Wilde, widower of the parish of St. Bartholomew the Great, married Martha A. Allington, spinster; and under date November 23, 1721, Samuel Richardson (celebs) married Martha Wilde (soluta) of the parish of St. Botolph's, Aldersgate. It seems likely that this Martha was the daughter of the John and Martha above named; and as, from Richardson's will, we know that he had a brother-in-law, Allington Wilde, Nichols probably confused the son, who was named after his mother's family, with the father, John, who died in 1728, and who had 'a very noble printing house in Aldersgate.'

Through the influence of Mr. Arthur Onslow, who became Speaker of the House of Commons in 1728, he was entrusted with printing the Journals of the House of Commons. Of these he printed twenty-six volumes, and incurred thereby a debt owing to him by the Government of £3,000, which he had great difficulty in getting paid, 'owing,' says Mr. Knight, 'to every sort of jobbery and fraud during most part of the eighteenth century . . . of under-secretaries and auditors of accounts.'

In 1736 he printed the Daily Journal, and in 1738 the Daily Gazetteer. Some noblemen and authors founded in 1736 'A Society for the Encouragement of Learning,' and appointed him to be one of the printers. The Society was intended to make authors independent of publishers. It soon collapsed.

'These years,' says Mrs. Thomson, 'were for Richardson a period of much domestic trouble. His first wife, overwhelmed by grief at the loss of all her children, died in 1731. He did not long remain a widower, and the next year he married Elizabeth Leake, the daughter of a bookseller at Bath. Their eldest child, Elizabeth, born in 1733, lived only a few months, but Mary, born in 1734, Martha, in 1736, Anne, in 1737, and Sarah, in 1740, all survived their father. There was also a son Samuel, born in 1739, and buried in 1740. Richardson felt his bereavements deeply.'

REVIVAL OF THE BOOK TRADE IN FRANCE.

We are glad to learn that the book trade in France, which had languished for some time owing to public attention being monopolised by important events, has revived; and that authors and publishers who not long ago were discouraged, are now so active in book-producing that critics, anxious to give the printer's devil his due, find it difficult to do justice to all the new works claiming their attention.

M. Gaston Deschamps, writing on this subject in Le Temps, tells us that 'novels abound; poems begin to multiply, stimulated by the taste for poetry shown by the public since the production of "Cyrano de Bergerac" and the "Aiglon." Historical works are more numerous, testifying to the studious taste of our contemporaries, or at least to their inclination for ransacking old documents. Philosophy has no wish to be left in the lurch. . . . Our sociologists, psychologists, anthropologists, and pedagogues are of an inexhaustible fertility. Wordy travellers do not spare us a single halting-place on their journeys. Actors write their memoirs. Kings compose stanzas. Even the Pope publishes elegant Latin verses.'

M. Deschamps considers vituperation of book buyers injudicious, and states that about the year 1825 most of the writers quarrelled with their richest clients. Before that time authors were all sugar and honey for the 'gentle reader'; and novelists and poets paid homage to the omnipotence of public opinion. In the time of Charles Nodier, whose 'Trilby' (not to be confused with George Du Maurier's more popular story), containing pictures of life in the Scottish Highlands, was published before Scott's 'Waverley,' some writers continued faithful to this custom; but the truculence of the romantic school disturbed the cordial understanding. Théophile Gautier was the leader in these attacks on 'bourgeois' readers, and he confesses, in his 'History of Romanticism,' to the abuse of certain words, such as decrepitude, bald heads, routine, Joseph Prudhomme, &c., when applied to the bourgeois of 1830.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Mr. George Allen.—'Helwân and the Egyptian Desert,' by W. Page May, M.D. The town of Helwân, whose praises as a health and pleasure-giving resort Dr. May so warmly sets forth in these pages, is situated fifteen miles south of Cairo, in the desert, and within three miles of the Nile. Its chief recommendation is its climate, for which it is claimed that 'it can hardly be equalled, and in no way excelled by any other known resort.' It would appear, from the articles contributed by Professor Sayce and Professor G. Schweinfurth to this volume, that it also presents interesting features in its archæology and flora. These articles, however, are thrown in more by way of ballast, and the rest of the book is a glowing panegyric by Dr. May of the advantages of Helwân as a winter health resort, its baths and mineral waters, suitability in special cases, hotel and pension accommodation, &c. The attractions of the place are further displayed in a number of charming illustrations reproduced from photographs. There is, moreover, a capital map, and, so that no one may be deterred from a visit by ignorance of the route, this is fully explained, with rates of passage, railway fares, time tables, and so forth. The impression left on the mind is that Dr. May is an enthusiastic admirer of the town and its health-giving attributes.

From Messrs. Baillière, Tindall & Cox.—'Mock Nurses of the Latest Fashion, A.D. 1901: Professional Experiences in Short Stories, and the Nursing Question, with a short Memoir of the Author,' by Frederick James Gant, F.R.C.S. We are glad, but scarcely surprised, to see that a second edition of this book has been called for. It exposes very effectually the abuses of the nursing profession, and by a description of certain types shows how much harm may be wrought in this calling. In some respects we are not altogether at one with Mr. Gant, but none can deny that the evils to which he draws such pointed notice largely exist, and are in danger of increasing. A good nurse is one of God's most divinely organised beings, but when attributes of self-importance, unjustifiable vanity, and mercenary greed spring up she becomes a positive terror. We cannot, as we say, agree with Mr. Gant in all his opinions, but there is little doubt that on many of the failings of the nursing profession he has thrown an unsparing light.

From Messrs. Barnicott & Pearce, Taunton.—'The Bath and Wells Diocesan Kalendar, 1901,' edited by the Rev. E. H. Bates, M.A. The preface to this useful work shows that the new editor is very earnest in his duties, and the succeeding pages reveal a very gratifying result of his diligence. The arrangement followed is, of course, that which has found favour in previous issues, but here and there new features have been introduced. The information seems to have been very thoroughly brought up to date, and no pains have apparently been spared to render the book serviceable and trustworthy. The frontispiece represents the church of St. John Baptist, Yeovil, and included in the work are a map of the diocese and twenty-six rural deanery sketch maps.

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—'The Age of Louis XI., as described by French Contemporaries and French Historians,' edited with introduction, notes, exercises on the text, and subjects for essays, by F. W. B. Smart, B.A. There is no period of French history more interesting than that surrounding the times of Louis XI., and Mr. Smart in this contribution to the 'Historical French Reading' series has selected his material with excellent judgment. We should say that the interest of a student once quickened by the perusal of such a work as 'Quentin Durward' would learn the lessons of this manual with the utmost avidity, and a study of the two books might well run together. We should pay a well-deserved word of praise to Mr. Smart's notes, these meeting all the requirements of the student without overburdening his mind with unnecessary detail.

From the same.—'Woodstock: a Tale of the Year Sixteen Hundred and Fifty-one,' by Sir Walter Scott. School edition, with introduction and notes, by H. Corstorphine. Well printed and suitably bound, this volume should form an excellent educational instructor in the hands of an adroit teacher. The story itself will have many attractions for youthful readers, and their interest in the events of the period having been excited by the narrative, they will afterwards seek for more substantial confirmation of their information in the histories of the time. Mr. Corstorphine's introduction is interesting but scarcely weighty. He seems too much inclined to insist upon trifles, and to fail in taking that broad, comprehensive view of Scott's work which is necessary. It would be well, too, if in pointing out inaccuracies in Scott's novel he avoided slips on his own part. The references on page xiii are both wrong, page 10 being intended for page 15, and page 15 for page 20. We do not understand also the order of the notes.

From Messrs. Cassell & Company.—'A Practical Method of Teaching Geography (England and Wales, Part II.),' by J. H. Overton. This work is intended to complete the series commenced in Part I. by exercises showing the Agricultural and Fishing Industries, together with the naval and railway centres. Twenty-three outline and sectional maps are given, with a sheet of tissue paper covering each; and the pupil is directed in the first place to trace the outline, and then insert such features as are required. Thus in a sketch map of the six northern counties, with the course of the rivers indicated, and the position of a few towns shown by a small ring, he is asked, after tracing the outline, to add the names of the rivers and towns from memory. It is an excellent idea, we think, and admirably calculated to impress the facts of geography on the scholar's mind.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'A Path of Thorns,' by Ernest Alfred Vizetelly. If the reader should experience a slight feeling of disappointment after the perusal of this story, Mr. Vizetelly must attribute it to his own rashness in promising more thorns for the path of the heroine than he has apparently been able to manufacture. The most striking character in the narrative is not the pretty, sweet-dispositioned ingénue Marthe Lebrun, but a certain Countess de Trévy, into whose service, as secretary and companion, the motherless girl is taken. This lady is depicted as a beautiful fiend of the very highest pretensions—a kind of Milady in 'The Three Musketeers'; fascinating, sensuous, and intensely revengeful. It is, in fact, for the paying off of an old score that she has befriended the distressed Marthe, for she alone knows of the girl's real parentage, and hopes by the disclosure of the secret to humiliate the man who many years previously had slighted her. She also designs to fasten the crime of murder on him. But, after all, her machinations come to naught, and she seems rather to fade out of the story than make a bold, picturesque ending. The intensity of her wicked nature is excellently described, and her person quite stands out from the narrative in its lithe, sinuous grace, white full bosom, flashing eyes, blood-red lips, and all the other seductive attributes that popularly go to make up the personality of a thoroughly bad woman, but somehow she never seems to live up to the full extent of her evil powers. Her actions lack grit and complete devilment. Mr. Vizetelly, in other words, has given his embodiment a splendid testimonial for wickedness which she fails somewhat to justify. However, in most other respects the story is worthy of high praise. The lights and shades of character are excellently contrasted; there is some very pretty love-making; and the interest, once the reader has penetrated into the course of the narrative, is well sustained. Perhaps it is unnecessary to add, knowing the predilections of the author, that the scene is laid in France.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd. 'The Coming Waterloo,' by Captain Cairnes. It is impossible within the limited space at our disposal to convey an idea of the living interest of this book, which purposes to describe a war between England and France or rather that period of it waged in the year 1903. Beginning with a picturesque description of the arrival on the French coast near Boulogne of a British fleet of transports conveyed by men of war, and an attack by French submarine boats which is crushingly defeated and is followed by the unopposed landing of the troops, the story—in which are some capital types of all arms of the service—moves briskly on through the varied fortunes of war until the end. We forewarn the reader that he will be kept on the alert from start to finish. The concluding words of Colonel Daunt—'The highly trained few will annihilate the half trained multitude in the future'—may well be pondered over and acted upon by those who have the oversight of our few and brave but sometimes half trained and fed and not always adequately armed soldiers. If nothing be learned from that object lesson, the war in South Africa, no book howsoever true and brightly written can teach those in authority.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'My First Voyage: a Reminiscence of an Imaginative Childhood,' by Alphonse Daudet. Mr. Robert H. Sherard's name is also associated with this volume in the work of transcriber, and we notice that on the cover it is even linked with that of the eminent French author. The reminiscence is quite unworthy of M. Daudet's powers, and would far better have been left in oblivion. Mr. Sherard has scarcely honoured the memory of his friend in thus publishing it.

From Messrs. Downey & Co., Limited.—'Red and Black: a Story of Provincial France,' by De Stendhal (Henri Beyle), translated by Charles Tergie. Fifty-nine years have elapsed since Henri Beyle's death, and seventy since the appearance of his romance 'Le Rouge et le Noir,' which he had finished in 1830 at Trieste while French consul there. In it he had wished to depict French society and political parties as they were before the Revolution of 1830, and he certainly succeeded in giving a picture of the period heightened by Rembrandtlike effects. But he was in advance of his time, and he knew it; for, in the preface to his first novel, 'De l'Amour,' he wrote: 'Not four in one hundred of the readers of "Corinne" will understand this book,' and of himself he said: 'I shall be understood about 1880.' Certain it is that only seventeen copies of 'De l'Amour' were sold in the years 1822 to 1833! 'Le Rouge et le Noir' was the first of the psychological novels to which the genius of Balzac afterwards gave such a vogue by that marvellous series of writings embodying the results of his multifarious knowledge, to which he gave the generic designation of 'La Comédie Humaine.' The title, 'Red and Black,' is evidently suggested by the two professions which alternately attract the hero, Julien Sorel, the Army and the Church. Julien is a delicate lad, yet high-spirited, intelligent, and industrious, but inordinately ambitious. This failing is stimulated by the unjust treatment he receives at the hands of his father—a crafty, mercenary village carpenter—and his rough gigantic brothers, who sneer at him as a weakling and a book-worm, likely to become a burden to his relatives. He has two friends, however—an old retired army surgeon, who worships the memory of Napoleon, and whose reading is confined to the Bulletins of the Grand Army and the 'Memorial of St. Helena'; and the parish priest, who is proud of his progress in Latin, and wishes him to become a priest. Julien's inclination is towards the Army, but the chances of promotion seem few, while the Church, under the Bourbons, can offer some good fat livings. An offer of the post of tutor to the three sons of the Mayor of Verrières which he, or rather his father, accepts, finally decides him to back the black and not the red. How he comports himself in the Mayor's house, under what circumstances he leaves it and goes to Paris, how he fares in society there, and how, when all the objects of his ambition seem attainable, he meets with a terrible fate; the result of his own misconduct, will be found related in this remarkable work, which gives no very favourable view of society life in the Paris salons of seventy years ago. Some Americanisms rather disfigure the translation. A French lady of those days would hardly have invited a gentleman to 'Go ahead' with what he was saying; neither can we suppose a bishop of that period exclaiming, 'I must have that right away'; and surely 'Dame' should be rendered by 'Forsooth!' and not by 'Damn.'

From Mr. Alexander Gardner.—'Rachel Penrose, Christian,' by A. Gordon Macleod, Minister of Ochiltree. Ian Fraser and Roderick Maclean are both suitors for the hand of May Macpherson. The former really loves the girl, the latter is an associate of smugglers, and a male flirt. One night the two men meet near the smugglers' 'juniper house,' angry words pass between them resulting in a challenge from Ian to Roddie, who, however, refuses to fight a duel with firearms, but dares Ian to leap the 'Narrows' in Clave Burn. If Ian cleared the leap May was to be his; if not she was to be Roddie's. They drew lots for the first chance, which Roddie wins; and, leaping over the chasm like a roe, shouts back to his rival, 'Traitor, try your fate!' The words unnerve Ian, but, after some hesitation, he springs, falls short, is carried away by the angry waters and drowned. 'May was Roddie's and sweet revenge, but at what price!' Roddie is at first filled with remorse; but, soon after this sad scene, an uncle dies leaving him land and money, and yet more money on condition of his marrying the pretty Quaker heroine Rachel Penrose. What fate awaits Roddie, Rachel, and May will be found related in this enthralling story, which abounds in picturesque descriptions and well-discriminated characters. The reader's attention is never allowed to flag, but is kept constantly on the stretch until the end of Mr. Macleod's admirably told romance, the like of which is not published every day.

From Messrs. Greening & Co.—'Captain Mayne Reid: his Life and Adventures,' by Elizabeth Reid, assisted by Charles H. Coe. The name of Mayne Reid, we are afraid, scarcely evokes the amount of interest among readers that it did some few years ago, but still there must be many old and young admirers of the deceased author who will eagerly welcome this work. Practically it is an enlargement, with fuller details, of the memoir of Mayne Reid by his widow, which was published some time ago. Captain Mayne Reid had a strangely adventurous career, and some of the incidents of his life might well have been taken from his own stories. His experiences during the Mexican War have all the interest of fiction, and his after life was no less devoid of remarkable incident and varied detail. No doubt, the powerful personality of the man, which compelled him to be always up and doing, always moving about, exerting his restless energy in some direction or other, led to a good deal of the fascination that surrounds his career. Mrs. Reid, by the unaffectedness and simplicity of her narrative, throws the character of her husband into strong relief, and his many good qualities and amusing eccentricities are clearly revealed. Several illustrations emphasise and brighten the work, among these being three portraits of Mayne Reid at different periods of his life.

From Mr. Wm. Heinemann.—'Ten Months in the Field with the Boers,' by an Ex-Lieutenant of General de Villebois-Mareuil, with a map and portrait. It is rare to get from Mr. Heinemann a book so unfurnished as this—no index, no chapters, no table of contents, nothing but the title running on from page to page. The ex-Lieutenant of the famous Boer mercenary General gives a straightforward, matter-of-fact account of his experiences with the Boers. He is fairly impartial, but attaches too much importance to the utterances of one or two discontented soldiers on our side. He says both sides used explosive bullets, and both made big blunders. He is probably correct when he says that when Ladysmith was first invested the Boers missed 'one of the most magnificent opportunities imaginable. Full of confidence, flushed with success, well equipped, and more numerous than they would ever be again, they might have reckoned on the co-operation of the Cape Boers, who, believing in the possible success of their brethren, were preparing to throw in their lot with them.' But they frittered away their chance in the vain attempt to take Ladysmith and Mafeking and Kimberley, and gave us time to pour 200,000 men into the country. There are too many books about the war, but this French view of it is both interesting and instructive.

From Messrs. Henderson & Son, St. Andrews, we have received No. 1 of 'The Library Bulletin of the University of St. Andrews.' The publication of a quarterly 'Bulletin' has been sanctioned by the Library Committee in the belief that it will meet a want which has been increasingly felt with the expansion of the University, and in the hope that it will lead to greater interest being taken in the Library itself. The primary purpose of the 'Bulletin' is to record the titles of books received from quarter to quarter, so that the teaching staff, students, and readers generally may be kept informed as to the growth of the Library with the least possible delay.

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett, Limited.—'Amusement Only,' by Richard Marsh. That so often mentioned personage the general reader is not prone to quarrel with the literary bread and butter so liberally provided for him by novelists, always premising that the plot be passably interesting and not too sombre. Even he, however, has of late been heard to complain that some recent romances are morbid, and that humour is conspicuous by its absence from the fiction of to-day. To such complainers and to all in search of innocent mirth we can honestly recommend Mr. Richard Marsh's 'Amusement Only.' The volume contains twelve capital stories each and all fully justifying the title. Where all are good, to select any for special encomium seems invidious. If, however, this be permitted we can assure those who may read 'Aunt Jane's Jalap' of many a hearty laugh; and, although 'An Old-fashioned Christmas,' funny as it is, contains some pathetic touches, they will be pardoned for the story's pleasant ending, even by those in search of 'amusement only.'

From Messrs. Isbister & Co.—'By Land and Sky,' by the Rev. John M. Bacon, M.A. In his preface to this volume the author laments the slight attention that is paid nowadays to the scientific exploration of the air. This may be so, and no doubt on the Continent and in America greater and more practical interest is taken in the subject, and yet there are numbers of people in this country who are not sufficiently blinded by the modern developments in electricity and kindred motor powers as to lose all sight of the improvements that may be effected in other directions. Such people will be warmly interested in Mr. Bacon's work. Pleasantly and lucidly, with none of the air of the pedant, he tells them of ballooning in the past, acoustic mysteries, the transmission of sound, wireless telegraphy in the clouds, and other absorbing features in connection with this subject; while his own experiences as an aeronaut, of which he affords some striking examples, certainly do not constitute the least attractive portion of the volume. There are several illustrations reproduced from photographs, one of which represents a rather perilous descent across telegraph wires.

From Mr. John Lane.—'New Rhymes for Old, and other Verses,' by Anthony C. Deane. The author of this volume is in a merry mood, and from the lightness of his heart he displays his versifying powers to excellent advantage. His happy conceits will provoke a smile on the face of the most despondent reader, and it is impossible not to feel brighter for having been in the society of such a cheery writer. The following extract is a fair specimen of Mr. Deane's style. It forms part of a parody of Mr. W. E. Henley:

'Calm and implacable,
Eyeing disdainfully the world beneath,
Sat Humpty-Dumpty on his mural eminence
In solemn state;
And I relate his story.
In verse unfettered by the bothering restrictions
Of rhyme or metre,
In verse (or rhythm as I prefer to call it)
Which, consequently, is far from difficult to write.

He sat. And at his feet
The world passed on—the surging crowd
Of men and women, passionate, turgid, dense,
Keenly-alert, lethargic, or obese.
(Those two lines scan!)

Let us proceed. Suddenly from his seat Did Humpty-Dumpty slip. Vainly he clutched
The impalpable air. Down and down,
Right to the foot of the wall,
Right on to the horribly hard pavement that ran beneath it,
Humpty-Dumpty, the unfortunate Humpty-Dumpty, Fell.'

From Mr. John Long.—'Happiness: its Pursuit and Attainment,' by the Rev. W. J. Kelly. It is hardly necessary to say that a highly interesting topic is discussed in this volume—one that concerns all human kind most narrowly. But just as Bacon's oft-repeated question 'What is Truth?' is difficult of solution, so 'What is Happiness?' would probably prove unanswerable by most readers. The condition depends largely upon temperament. Some people derive their happiness from hoarding money, others from giving it away; many have no object in life but the pursuit of pleasure, others find their chief satisfaction in giving pleasure to their friends. Happiness, in short, can only be discussed from the ideal point of view, and it is from this position accordingly that our author regards it. He has written a refined, thoughtful volume, treating of his subject in the various aspects of mammon, glory, power, intellectual pursuits, love and friendship, and other sources of pleasure, and he has also considered the attitude of the stoic, the positivist, and the Christian. The conclusion finally arrived at is that only in the next world can those who desire a perfect life of joy and pleasure have their wishes completely fulfilled.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Highways and Byways in East Anglia,' by William A. Dutt, with illustrations by Joseph Pennell. Probably the highest praise we can award this volume is to say that it has inspired us with a strong desire to visit and inspect for ourselves the scenes so eloquently described by the author and illustrator. And yet we doubt whether our enjoyment would altogether realise our anticipations. As Mr. Dutt well remarks, the scenery embraced by the vague boundary lines of East Anglia 'can nowhere be described as grand or sublime, and it only attains to perfect charm and loveliness where winding rivers and placid lagoons are its most conspicuous and pervading features.' It is in their romantic, historical, and legendary surroundings that the towns, villages, and public buildings find their chief charm, and to derive the highest enjoyment from these one would either have to be as enthusiastic and cultured an antiquarian as Mr. Dutt, or to possess his actual company on the road. Practically we have the last-named pleasure in the present volume, and closer acquaintance with the scenes and objects described would possibly only lead to disappointment. As a guide Mr. Dutt is equipped with a stock of information that renders him well nigh irresistible. He can tell you in a vivacious, chatty manner everything of interest attaching to a town, village, or public building, whether romantic, historical, or legendary; he knows exactly what distinguished men have stayed at this hotel or what famous author has made literary capital of that; will discourse to you if he need be of the curiosities of natural history or describe the mysteries of making gun-flints; has an inexhaustible fund of anecdote and quotation, and is evidently on familiar terms with all the famous writers of this or any other age; and in short can endow the most humdrum object with a charm resulting from his own knowledge, or possibly, in some cases, imagination. In all his efforts to entertain and interest the reader, he has been ably seconded by Mr. Joseph Pennell, whose numerous illustrations form no mean attraction of the volume.

From the same.—'Au Pôle en Ballon,' par Victor Patrice, adapted and edited by P. Shaw Jeffrey, M.A. This story of adventure in the Arctic regions, amid icefloes and walruses, the buffetings of adverse weather, and terrible dangers, is thoroughly calculated to enlist the sympathies and interest of juvenile readers, and for this reason has been judiciously included in 'Siepmann's Elementary French Series.' Great caré has evidently been taken by Mr. Jeffrey in the preparation of the notes, and the appendices by the general editors, Messrs. Otto Siepmann and Eugène Pellissier—in which they give words and phrases for viva voce drill, sentences on Syntax and Idioms for viva voce practice, and passages for translation into French—are certainly not the least instructive portions of the work.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'The Twentieth Century New Testament,' a Translation into Modern English from the Original Greek. In three parts. Part II.: Paul's Letters to the Churches. The translators have conferred a real benefit on Bible students, and, indeed, on all readers of Holy Writ, by this accurate and very readable version of the canonical books of the New Testament, the second part of which is before us. The task they have set themselves has been so satisfactorily performed that it certainly merits the recognition and encouragement of those for whose use it is primarily intended, that is, those persons who are unable to read the original Greek text.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Our Naval Heroes,' edited by G. E. Marindin, M.A., with an introduction by Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, R.N., with about twenty-four portraits, including a photogravure frontispiece, by permission, of her late Majesty from the painting by Hoppner in St. James's Palace. This volume will make an admirable school prize, although primarily intended for the numerous class who love a book about our naval heroes.

'Admirals all, for England's sake,
Honour be yours and fame!
And honour, as long as waves shall break,
To Nelson's peerless name.'

In the next edition we hope to see an index, even if only an alphabetical list of the naval engagements referred to in the work, an interesting feature of which is that the biographies of the heroes are for the most part written by one of their descendants, for instance, Earl Nelson writes about Nelson, and Commander Troubridge about Admiral Troubridge. As Admiral Beresford says: 'The list of Naval Heroes here passed in rapid but instructive review embraces all the best, and includes some of the least-known names in the history of the British Navy from Edward the Third's time down to the last of Nelson's great captains. The text is printed on nice light handling paper unglazed, the portraits are printed separately, and the binding is light and bright.'

From Messrs. James Nisbet & Co.—'The Biblical Illustrator; or, Anecdotes, Similes, Emblems, Illustrations, Expository, Scientific, Geographical, Historical, and Homiletic, gathered from a wide range of Home and Foreign Literature, on the Verses of the Bible,' by the Rev. Joseph S. Exell, M.A. I. and II. Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther. In looking over this volume one can scarcely fail to be struck by the evidences on almost every page of painstaking industry and diligent research. It is indeed no light matter to have thus gathered together the comments and elucidatory treatment of several hundred theological writers and divines. Mr. Exell and his assistants, however, have the satisfaction of knowing that the 'Biblical Illustrator' is of the greatest service in furnishing sermon and educational outlines for a large number of Christian workers, and its usefulness in this respect can scarcely be over-estimated. Among the authors most frequently quoted we notice Dr. Parker, Dr. Alexander Maclaren, the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, De Witt Talmage, and J. Woffendale.

From Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.—'China's only Hope: an Appeal by her greatest Viceroy, Chang Chih-tung,' translated by Samuel I. Woodbridge. The author of this book evidently has the welfare of his country and countrymen sincerely at heart. But he labours under two disadvantages: one is, that his knowledge of foreign countries and their institutions, although really extraordinary in a Chinaman, is sometimes faulty; and the other, his rather too manifest fear of offending national prejudices in favour of time-honoured institutions. While there is in this work very much that is perfectly true and cogently stated, there are also some erroneous statements. For instance, when writing on the Centralisation of Power, he says: 'We have studied the philosophy of republics, and find that the translators of foreign books have wrongly interpreted the word Republic by Ming Ch'uen (literary "people power").' For the people in the republics of the West only have the right to discuss measures, and not to carry them into execution. (1) However, the book amply repays perusal. The first part, treating of the Moral Law, is, in some respects the most interesting, because from it we learn so much of the Chinese views of government. The second or practical part deals with suggested reforms, and contains many original and striking remarks. In the chapter on the Maintaining of the Army, for example, it is said of International Law and Disarmament: 'If countries are equally matched, then international law is enforced; otherwise the law is inoperative. For what has international law to do with fighting issues when one country is strong and another weak?' Under such circumstances 'disarmament is an international joke and international law a deception.'

From Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co.—'Una: a Song of England in the Year Nineteen Hundred,' by William Gerard. A strong pervading spirit of patriotism is the chief feature of Mr. Gerard's work. The volume contains other poems in addition to the one supplying the title. There are several grouped together under the heading 'Lovers of England,' and a number of sonnets. The following, taken from 'Who Loves England?' will best illustrate the extent of Mr. Gerard's poetic powers:

'O blest souls, from envy freed!
Crowns remaining are there none;
Gone each guerdon, claim'd each meed:
Yet ye have your benison:
Watching, still to watch for England,
Loving her, to still love on!'

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'History of the People of the Netherlands,' by Petrus Johannes Blok. Part III.—The War with Spain. The present volume carries the history from 1568 to 1621. Within these dates, it is scarcely necessary to point out, many important events in connection with the Netherlands States occurred. A large proportion of the volume is devoted to the social and economic conditions which led up to the struggle for independence resulting in the Eighty Years' War. The good and evil influences of this conflict, in its relation to military, theological, and political matters, are thoroughly discussed, and a full explanation of the manner in which the period has been treated by earlier and later writers from partisan and from non-partisan points of view is given in an appendix. 'Whoever is desirous,' says the author, 'of treating this epoch cannot complain, as in regard to earlier times in the Netherlands, of lack of sources or of lack of predecessors. On the contrary, the difficulty is to find the way through the wilderness of documents and studies. An attempt is made in this book to overcome this, and to put together a narrative which, though based upon independent source studies, is at the same time, so far as possible, drawn from existing literature on the period.'

It remains but to add that Professor Blok's work has been very carefully and sympathetically translated by Ruth Putnam, who has brought out all the force of the original. The work is illustrated with several maps.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—'The Companion Dictionary of Quotations,' being a volume of extracts old and new from writers of all ages, selected and arranged by Norman MacMunn. 'In every work of genius we recognise our own rejected thoughts; they come back to us with a certain alienated majesty.' In these words is implied the main object of this little book. Under 'War' Mr. MacMunn gives this from Emerson: 'Man is born into the state of War.' But did not Isaac D'Israeli begin one of the chapters in his 'Curiosities of Literature' with the words 'War is the natural condition of mankind'? If we are right in trusting to memory on this matter then D'Israeli's shade will have 'recognised his own adapted thoughts' when Emerson published his line. The volume is attractively produced, bound in leather with rounded corners and not too big for the pocket. There are nineteen hundred quotations.

From the same.—'Montes, the Matador, and other Stories,' by Frank Harris. The chief fiction in this volume is, perhaps, a little spun out, but on the whole interesting. Montes is an undersized man, who from his early youth has had an intimate acquaintance with bulls, and thoroughly understands their peculiarities and dispositions. Arrived at manhood, he obtains employment in the bull-ring, and eventually, after passing through the lower grades of capa and banderillero, becomes an espada or matador. By this time, however, he has fallen in love with a beautiful girl, as treacherous and heartless as she is good-looking. She plays him false with a fine-limbed, handsome rival, and Montes takes his revenge upon the pair of them in a way that is certainly original. The other stories of the volume are of a somewhat different character but scarcely more solid construction. Mr. Harris may be complimented on the interest he has managed to extract from somewhat slender material.

From Messrs. George Routledge & Sons.—'His Last Plunge,' by Nat Gould. The story takes its name from the fact of the hero, Gay Lumley, having hazarded all his money on his horse Gonsalvo for the City and Suburban. Naturally there was a woman in the matter whom he was anxious to win, and equally of course his horse was beaten, after a terrific race, by a head, and the girl throws the ruined owner over. Somehow we seem to have met these people before, but they are always interesting to the lovers of sport. Afterwards Gay Lumley goes out to Australia as the manager of a racing stable, and he takes his trainer, Charles Mold, and Gonsalvo (whom he has sold to his new employer) with him. Here some thoroughly sporting incidents take place, and the inner life of a training establishment is depicted with much piquancy and power. The story is perfectly redolent of the turf, and in his animated descriptions of equine contests Mr. Nat Gould has never done anything more skilful. There is a capital account of a black boy who won a race by whistling, but for this we must refer our readers to the book itself.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'Animals of Africa,' by H. A. Bryden, with 12 separate full-page illustrations and many in the text, drawn by E. Caldwell. This is an addition to the very attractive 'Library for Young Naturalists,' edited by F. G. Afalo, F.R.G.S. Mr. Bryden knows how to make the 'dry bones of Science' into an appetising dish for young readers, and his book cannot fail to be a favourite with all who are fortunate enough to get it; the price (6s.) seems rather high at first sight for a book 5 × 8 × 1 inches in size, but the number of illustrations doubtless accounts for this. There is a very full index and unusually good cover design.

From the same.—'Billiards for Beginners,' by John Roberts (champion), edited by F. M. Hotine. The articles here reprinted were in the first instance contributed to the Billiard Review. They will be found not only of much service to novices at the game, but of considerable interest and assistance to older players. So far as billiards can be taught by diagram, this little work serves an extremely useful purpose.

From Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co., Ltd. 'Picnics and Suppers,' by Colonel A. R. Kenney-Herbert, author of 'Common Sense Cookery' &c. The object of this little work is to facilitate the task of composing the menus of suppers and picnics; it might almost be called a treatise on cold dishes, the majority of which are equally suitable for luncheons. There is probably a good deal of truth in the author's statement that 'In the vast majority of English kitchens the loss incurred by waste would cover the expense of practising the very best methods of cookery.' This is doubtless the secret of the fact that most of our best restaurants are run by foreigners. An Englishman loves a good dinner, but he would rather eat a bad one than have any bother about the cooking part of it. In the chapter on 'Supper Soups,' we notice that Colonel Herbert speaks of 'mulligatunny'; surely it has been mullagatawny so long that it would not taste so nice with any other name. Webster gives its origin as 'milagutannir,' meaning pepper-water in the Tamil language of Ceylon and Southern India. We are glad, indeed, to see that the Colonel admits that 'Good English pies with pie-crust are of course excellent things,' and that in the 'menus' for suppers he gives the names of the various dishes in English, with the French names underneath; this will be invaluable to many British and Irish hostesses, to whom the book can be strongly recommended.

From the Unicorn Press.—'An Englishman's Love Letters.' Here we have a delightful parody of the volume previously published by Mr. John Murray—'An Englishwoman's Love Letters.' The little work perfectly ripples with mirth-provoking sallies, and its humour is of that subtle, subdued character which tends to quiet enjoyment rather than loud, boisterous laughter. And, moreover, the author, whoever he may be, is a wise man in his craft. He knows exactly when to stop—that is, before his reader has become surfeited. As a specimen of delicate travesty, never exceeding the bounds of good taste, and always written in the lightest and brightest style, nothing could be better.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Naomi's Exodus,' by Lily H. Montagu. This is one of the most charming little books we have met with for a long time. It is the story of a young Jewess who is driven, by a feeling she cannot understand or explain, to leave the home where she has been brought up—a small chandler's shop in a Jewish quarter of West London, which is kept by her aunt—to get her own living. Her people think that Naomi has become a Meshummadas—a converted Jewess—but this is not the case. Her 'exodus' is only for a time, but it gives Miss Lily Montagu the material for a most interesting and often touching and pathetic little story. It is not often that the outside world gets such a photograph of Jewish life and character as we find in this slight sketch of it, slight in outline, but full of life and actuality. Miss Montagu writes so well, and invests the characters she depicts with such individuality and interest, that we hope it will not be long before she tries her hand on a larger and more ambitious canvas.

From Mr. Philip Wellby.—'Inferences from Haunted Houses and Haunted Men,' by the Hon. John Harris. When a man firmly believes in apparitions our own experience is that no amount of reasoning will convince him of his mistake, and that he will always find arguments of a highly ingenious character to back up his assumptions. Far be it from us to assert that no 'sich thing' as apparitions ever existed, but they depend for their appearance, we are inclined to think, on an abnormal state of the nerves. Mr. Harris in his little volume traverses some interesting phases of the subject, and, though we may not always agree with his inferences, there is no getting away from the fact that he has popular sentiment and tradition on his side. The book will possess attraction for the psychologist and spiritualist.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'Bits of Turf,' by Nathaniel Gubbins. The name of the author stands high among sporting writers, and for rough vigorous description of the surroundings of the racecourse he possesses few rivals. Many readers will no doubt recognise in these 'bits of turf' papers which have already appeared in the columns of the Sporting Times, but the majority of them date so far back as to have become shadowy, and in any case they are well worthy of reproduction in more permanent form. The book will form an admirable accompaniment to a cigar after dinner.

NEW EDITIONS.—Messrs. W. & R. Chambers have sent out a new and revised edition of 'Electricity Simplified: a Handbook to the Practical Application of Electricity for Industrial and Domestic Purposes,' by A. T. Stewart, A.I.E.E. This little book is not intended as a text-book, but as a popular guide to the subject. It supplies present and intending consumers of electric energy with the information which may be found most useful to them in this capacity, and in especial points out the great danger, owing to the immense competition, of employing incompetent firms for the execution of electrical contracts. The volume is well supplied with illustrations, and a full glossary is added of the technical expressions used in the work.—We have received from Mr. Charles J. Thynne a copy of 'Christ, Our Example,' by Caroline Fry, making the twenty-fifth thousand of this popular work. In the preface by the Rev. A. M. W. Christopher, M.A., Rector of St. Aldate's, Oxford, a very high encomium is passed on the usefulness of the book, and this would seem to be fully borne out by its wide circulation.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

IMPERIAL COMPETITION

IN

JACKSON'S DRAWING COPY BOOKS

This Competition is open to all pupils in public and private schools throughout the British Empire. There are eighteen superior prizes for both Junior and Senior pupils, and, in addition to nearly one hundred other prizes, Certificates of Merit will be awarded to those whose work deserves such recognition. Now that Drawing is a compulsory subject, the opportunity is afforded to pupils in Elementary Schools of winning valuable premiums with a minimum of labour, as there are only three pages of models to each book in the Series.

For Conditions and all Particulars of above Competition, apply to the Publishers.

PRESS OPINIONS.

'They cover a wide range—in marked contrast to the tame and ordinary drawing book. . . . Draughtsmen will welcome these bright and attractive copies.'—JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

'An excellent series worthy of high commendation.'—EDUCATIONAL TIMES.

'A series of exceptional merit. . . . We know of no similar attempt to popularise high art.'
SCHOOLMASTER.

'An excellent and highly practical series . . . very comprehensive.'

SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE.
'Tastefully designed, chastely executed in every respect excellent—eminently fitted to develop the artistic faculties.'—EDUCATIONAL NEWS.

'Serve admirably as a relief from Code grinding. . . . Splendid course of drawing.'

TEACHERS' AID.

'Have seen nothing like them, can most confidently recommend them.'

CIVIL SERVICE GAZETTE.

'Must be productive of the best possible results.'—NATIONAL TEACHER.

'The series for artistic excellence or for cheapness has no superior.'—CHILDREN'S MISTRESS.

'Should be seen by every Headmaster who makes drawing a subject in his school.'

Ambidextrous and Free-Arm Blackboard Drawing and Design

By F. F. LYDON. Crown 4to. 5s.

This work, in addition to a fully illustrated description of the forty-eight graduated plates, which are designed as a progressive course in free-arm drawing and design, gives numerous photographic blocks and diagrams illustrative of the method of work described, and of the best ways to fit up the class-room for the study of this subject. The letterpress shows how the subject may be inexpensively introduced into any school, and made an accessory to the ordinary drawing lesson. The forty-eight exercises, which begin with the simplest Curves and work up to examples of Floral Design, are also issued as four packets of drawing cards suitable for class teaching. All the copies, as befits the subject, are effectively reproduced white on a black background to represent actual blackboard drawing.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

THE FADING OF THE LIGHT, AND OTHER STORIES.

By ARCHIBALD DUNN, Jun.

'Mr. Archibald Dunn, jun., in his little book of short stories, entitled "The Fading of the Light, and other Stories," shows himself the possessor of considerable gifts as a writer of that form of fiction.'—ECHO.

'A series of stories and sketches, all of which are pleasantly readable, and some of which give evidence of real dramatic power.'—NEWCASTLE LEADER.

NEW EDITION OF IBSEN'S PROSE DRAMAS

Edited by WILLIAM ARCHER.

In the new edition each play will form a volume by itself. The typographical features of the original Norwegian editions will, so far as possible, be reproduced. The names of the characters will be placed above their speeches instead of in the same line, thus giving the page a lighter and more attractive appearance. Each volume will contain a frontispiece, representing, as a rule, one of the leading characters as embodied by a well-known actor or actress.

Royal 16mo. paper cover, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE DOLLAR LIBRARY OF AMERICAN FICTION.

Mr. Heinemann begs to announce a New Series of American Fiction to be published in Monthly Volumes, price Four Shillings each, or Two Guineas, post-free, for a Subscription to Twelve Volumes.

The Dollar Library will give to English readers a representative selection of the best American Fiction of the day, introducing to English readers hitherto unknown authors, thus appealing to readers particularly as a pioneer. It will afford an opportunity to English readers of gaining an impression of the mercurial genius picturesquely expressing itself on the other side of the Atlantic, and of appreciating a new graft on the tree of English Literature, which, transplanted to another clime, bids fair to yield yet another rich and luxuriant growth. A school of young American writers is pressing for recognition, gifted with a sense of form, pathos, humour—real delineators of life and character, to whom respect cannot be denied, and whom we can no longer afford to ignore in England.

The following volumes of The Dollar Library will appear early in 1901, and others are in preparation. They will appear, as far as practicable, at monthly intervals:—

THE GIRL AT THE HALFWAY HOUSE.

By E. HOUGH.

[March 1.

PARLOUS TIMES. By D. D. WELLS.

THE CHRONIC LOAFER. By NELSON LLOYD.

LORDS OF THE NORTH. By A. C. LAUT.

HER MOUNTAIN LOVER. By HAMLIN GARLAND.

The Dollar Library, price Four Shillings each volume, or Two Guineas, post-free, for a Subscription of Twelve Volumes.

THE OVER-PRODUCTION OF SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

It has often been a mystery to us where purchasers are found for the hundreds of thousands of copies of commonplace six-shilling novels which appear during each year. Not long ago a bookseller in a large way of business told us that he had fifteen different new six-shilling novels offered to him in one day, and that he had declined to subscribe for any of them. 'I have too many of the same kind on my shelves already.' Not long afterwards an evening paper reviewed these fifteen new novels in one half column—we will not be certain that it was exactly the same fifteen, but doubtless none but their authors could have told the difference. How many of these fifteen novels or any fifteen like them pay for the cost of production? Not one in a dozen probably, and the result is that there is an ever-increasing number of six-shilling and other cheap novels offered in what are called 'remainder lists' at prices which are little more than the cost of binding alone.

Every publisher is, of course, a law unto himself in this matter, no one wishes to dictate to him what he should publish, but we venture to suggest that in his own interest it would be well if he kept before him for reference the net result in profit or loss of each novel published by him during the year. Such a list would, we believe, be the best argument in favour of a restriction of the output of novels that could be devised, because it would appeal to the pocket.

That the production of novels is far in excess of the demand is unquestionable; the booksellers cannot sell them in the ordinary course of business, and are more and more disinclined to speculate in new books since they know that in a very short time the same books will be offered at remainder price.

Of course, there is no doubt that a great many, too many, novels and other books are published at the 'expense of the author.' The Authors' Society is never tired of harping on the iniquity of publishers who encourage authors to publish at their own expense. The ideal thing, perhaps, would be for the Society to start publishing on the capital of their weaker brethren who will insist on appearing in print; or the Society might well take the risk themselves, seeing that their president, Sir Walter Besant, says there is none.

In the meantime the book market groans with its weight of dead stock. We know from stories without number from the battlefield that there is nothing like a book for stopping a bullet—could we not pad our soldiers in South Africa with remainders of six-shilling novels, five per man would render them invulnerable and clear out two millions of stock at a very small cost to the Government?

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

We understand that Messrs. Bell have in preparation for publication in the autumn a large volume on 'Professor Hubert von Herkomer, R.A., and his Works,' by Mr. A. Lys Baldry. It will be illustrated with upwards of a hundred specimens, reproduced in photogravure and half-tone, of the artist's work, not only in oil and water-colour, but also in enamels, etching, and metal work, and will include the enamel full-length portrait of the German Emperor, which has just been completed, together with several interesting pictures destined for the Academy Exhibition this year.

From the convent to the stage is a far cry. 'Her Master Passion,' a new novel published this week by Pearsons, from the pen of Miss Bessie Hatton, has for its scene a religious house in Normandy and a London theatre. The author knows her country well, and has shown considerable literary skill already in 'The Village of Youth,' a new edition of which is to be published in the autumn. She is the younger daughter of Mr. Joseph Hatton.

Messrs. Macmillan's new edition of 'The Life of Archbishop Benson,' by his son, Mr. A. C. Benson, will bring that most fascinating work within reach of a much wider circle of readers. It appeals in a way which is not at all usual with the lives of great ecclesiastics and cultured and thoughtful persons of varied interests. The great Archbishop touched the religious and national life of his day on so many sides as to render his biography attractive to great numbers outside the Anglican communion. His early boyhood, his school and college life, his removal to a new public school, and thence, after a short interval at Lincoln, to initiate and to arrange a new diocese as well as to lay the foundations of the first and only cathedral built by English Churchmen since the Reformation, the eventful years of his Primacy of the whole Anglican communion, these are all given with a charm, a facile touch, and a freshness which sustains the interest of the reader throughout. He will feel that he has been under the shadow of a personality which was great, gracious, and saintly. The Archbishop has been happy in his biographer, a thing which cannot be affirmed of all those whose lives have been written by their sons. The original edition has only been shorn of chapters dealing with matters of a more technical character. To these the reader who wishes for fuller information may refer.

The University Press at Cambridge has undertaken to publish a complete translation of the Pali Jataka of 'Buddha Birth-stories,' which are supposed to be the oldest collection of folk-lore stories in existence. The work is expected to fill six or seven volumes; but at present only five volumes of the Pali text (published by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co.) have appeared. Each volume of the text is to be represented by a volume of the translation. This Buddhist collection of stories will be of great interest and importance for students of folk-lore; and it will also be of value as illustrating the manners and customs of ancient India.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish an illustrated book written by S. E. Kiser entitled 'Georgie,' which may perhaps be best described as a combination of humorous philosophy of the Dooley description, and the simplicity of a small boy's thoughts. Thus it is a book for young and old.

A cheap and popular souvenir of the great events of the war of 1899-1901 will be issued next week by Mr. Edward Arnold under the suggestive title of the 'Khaki Alphabet.' It has been illustrated by that well-known Punch artist Mr. Tom Browne, and the letterpress, by Mr. L. D. Powles, was recited at a Savage Club evening, and most favourably received.

General Baden-Powell recently sent a charming letter to Mrs. Mayne Reid acknowledging the receipt of a copy of that lady's popular biography of her husband, 'Captain Mayne Reid.' In the course of his letter General Baden-Powell says: 'I shall read it with the greatest interest, since he, in his writings, was one of my earliest instructors, and always my favourite author.' It is not generally known that General Baden-Powell gained his first ideas of scouting from the ardent perusal of Captain Mayne Reid's stories. The gallant Captain's life was as full of adventures as are his tales, consequently his biography reads like an exciting novel.

Messrs. Macmillan will publish shortly a volume of papers on 'Oxford in the Eighteenth Century,' by the late John Richard Green. The majority of these papers first appeared in the Oxford Chronicle many years ago, and are now republished under the supervision of Mrs. Green.

Miss Helen Milecete, the young Canadian author whose popular novels, 'A Girl of the North' and 'A Detached Pirate,' show signs of great promise from so young a writer, is now engaged on a third story, entitled 'Cat's Eyes.' The scene of Miss Milecete's new novel is, as in her previous works, laid in Canada, a background offering great opportunities to writers of fiction, being to a great extent unfamiliar to English readers.

Next week Mr. Fisher Unwin will issue a second edition of the volume of essays and stories by Mark Rutherford which he published a short time since under the title 'Pages from a Journal.'

Messrs. Greening will shortly publish a volume of humorous verse entitled 'Village Life and Feeling.' The author's name as given on the title-page is 'Rupert Upperton,' which we understand is the pseudonym adopted by a Church of England clergyman very popular in one of the Midland counties.

Messrs. Methuen are publishing immediately a new book by Mrs. Croker, entitled 'A State Secret'; and a new volume entitled 'Strange Happenings.' The latter book contains a number of stories by W. Clark Russell, W. E. Norris, and many other well-known writers.

Lord Percy's new book, 'Highlands of Asiatic Turkey,' being the result of his second journey in those remote parts, besides containing a valuable account of the political situation studied on the spot, is of special interest to the archæologist, geographer, and lover of Alpine climbing and scenery. This volume, which is very fully illustrated from photographs taken by the author, will be published by Mr. Edward Arnold at the beginning of March.

The frontispiece to the Art Journal for March will be a reproduction of Mr. W. Q. Orchardson's most recent picture, 'The Parting of the Ways.' The chief contents of the number will include the second part of the series on the Wallace Collection, by Mr. Claude Phillips, with illustrations of the Italian School represented at Hertford House; an illustrated description of 'Old Brentford,' by Mr. Francis Watt; and an article by Mr. Frank Rinder on the Ashbee Bequest, with reproductions of some of the pictures now on view at the South Kensington Museum.

A new and revised edition of two typical stories by Ouida, entitled respectively 'A Rainy June' and 'Don Gesualdo,' will be published under the title 'A Rainy June,' by Mr. Fisher Unwin, next week.

With reference to a statement recently made as to Messrs. Greening & Co.'s book on Swinburne being written with the poet's 'full knowledge and consent,' we are now informed by the publishers that they now find they were mistaken and have just learned for the first time that Mr. Swinburne knew nothing whatever of the book. Messrs. Greening are of course extremely sorry if any offence has been given to Mr. Swinburne by the publication of Mr. Theodore Wratistaw's work, and further desire to make it known that the book is in no way intended as a biography but rather as a study and an appreciation of the poet's work.

Messrs. Methuen are about to publish a new novel by C. F. Goss, entitled 'The Redemption of David Corson.' This book has had an exceptional success in America.

Mr. George Allen will publish on the 28th inst. the fifth issue of the 'Literary Year-Book.' Mr. Herbert Morrah, its editor, announces that this year's issue is further enlarged.

In the secondhand catalogue of Mr. Wm. Downing, of 5 Temple Row, Birmingham, we notice this item: 'A handsome set of Scott in a bookcase: Scott (Sir Walter) Waverley Novels, the Victoria edition, with frontispieces &c. by well-known artists, edited with notes &c. by Dr. David Laing, 25 vols. cr. 8vo. cloth, with a substantial revolving bookcase made specially to hold the set, price complete, £2. 1897.' What can the bookcase be made of? it sounds wonderfully cheap.

Mr. Grant Richards will publish in the course of a few days a book of political interest entitled 'Drifting.'

The extraordinary success of a number of American novels in the United States, which have run to circulations greater even than those of our most popular novelists, tempts Mr. Heinemann to start an English series of American fiction, under the title of 'The Dollar Library.' The price at which the series will be published is indicated by the title, and it is proposed to issue a volume a month, a rebate being offered to annual subscribers. The first volumes to appear will be the following: 'The Girl at the Halfway House,' by E. Hough; 'Parlous Times,' by D. D. Wells; 'Lords of the North,' by A. C. Laut; 'The Chronic Loafer,' by Nelson Lloyd; 'Her Mountain Lover,' by Hamlin Garland.

'The Problem of Conduct,' by Alfred Edward Taylor, to be published by Messrs. Macmillan, is described by its author as 'A Study in the Phenomenology of Ethics.'

Messrs. Scott, Greenwood & Co. have just published an English edition of 'The Manufacture of Mineral and Lake Pigments,' containing directions for the manufacture of all artificial artists' and painters' colours, enamel colours, soot and metallic pigments, by Dr. Josef Bersch, translated from the second revised edition by Arthur C. Wright, M.A., with forty-three illustrations.

'The Churches of Chislehurst' will be dealt with shortly in a little Guide to them by Mr. E. A. Webb, already known as the historian of that charming locality. The book will be fully illustrated from the archæological and present-day standpoints, and will be published by Mr. Geo. Allen next week.

The long-promised volume of Thackeray's 'Stray Papers,' consisting of Stories, Reviews, Verses and Sketches, illustrated, will be published immediately by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co.

Miss Adeline Sergeant's new novel, 'The Treasure of Captain Scarlett,' which is to be published shortly by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co., is a story of love and adventure, built round the mystery of a treasure.

Mr. C. T. Jacobi has contributed an article on 'The Making of Books' to the forthcoming volume of 'The Literary Year-Book,' published by Mr. Geo. Allen.

Mr. Andrew Iredale, of Torquay, has published a poem, 'In Memoriam: Victoria Regina,' expressive of our late Queen's glorious reign and character as 'Mother of her People,' also descriptive of her last hours, death, and funeral. The poem is above the average of verse of the kind.

Mr. Grant Richards will publish immediately the first volume of a series to be entitled 'British Regiments in War and Peace.' This volume, by Mr. Walter Wood, deals with the Rifle Brigade, which recently celebrated its centenary—a hundred years of almost constant fighting and privations.

Mr. James Clegg, of the Aldine Press, Rochdale, will shortly publish by subscription 'The Writings of Oliver Ormerod,' together with a Memoir of the Author, by Henry Colley March, M.D. Lond., F.S.A.

'The Regimental Records of the British Army: an Historical Résumé Chronologically Arranged, of Titles, Campaigns, Honours, Uniforms, Facings, Badges, Nicknames, &c.,' is the title of a new work by Mr. John S. Farmer, which Mr. Grant Richards will publish on February 26. The book contains, not only the records, but copies of all the badges worn by the different regiments.

Canon Hensley Henson's sermon preached in Westminster Abbey on the occasion of the Queen's death has been published by Messrs. Macmillan. The sermon was preached, it will be remembered, on behalf of the Gordon Boys' Home.

A large number of manuscripts by Heinrich Heine have recently been acquired by Professor Hans Meyer, of the Bibliographical Institute of Leipzig, including more than 1,000 letters.

'The Good Man of the Eighteenth Century' is the title of a series of studies in eighteenth century literature. The book (which will be ready on the 25th inst.) is by the Rev. Charles Whittuck, Rector of Bear-Wood, Berks, and late Fellow of Brasenose, and will be published by Mr. George Allen.

Mr. M. P. Shiel's novel, 'The Yellow Danger,' is to appear in sixpenny form through Mr. Grant Richards.

'Au Pôle en Ballon,' a story which has just been added to the 'Elementary French Series,' edited by M. Siepmann for Messrs. Macmillan, is adapted and edited by Mr. Shaw Jeffrey from the original of M. Victor Patrice. Jules Verne, in a well-known book, forecast submarine navigation; M. Patrice, in this work, prophesies of Polar discovery in a very similar narrative, which should beguile boys pleasantly enough into a knowledge of French.

Prof. J. A. Harrison has edited and annotated for Messrs. Macmillan & Co. Corneille's 'Nicomède,' a tragedy not previously edited in English. The preface contains a sketch of the historic passages from which Corneille drew his material, as well as a critical appreciation. La Harpe's 'Judgment' is also reprinted.

Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons have just added 'The Memoirs of Barry Lyndon &c.' and 'Catherine' to their most attractive and dainty 'New Century Library.'

Messrs. Methuen are about to publish a new volume of the 'Library of Devotion,' entitled 'The Prayer Book Psalter.' It is an edition of the Prayer Book version of the Psalms, edited, with an introduction and notes, by Canon B. W. Randolph, of Ely Theological College.

One million and twenty-seven thousand copies have been sold of nine novels recently issued in England and America by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. The sales of 'Richard Carvel' have reached 365,000; of 'The Choir Invisible,' 213,000; 'The Increasing Purpose,' 110,000; 'In the Palace of the King,' 80,000; 'Via Crucis,' 75,000; 'The Forest Lovers,' 70,000; 'The Pride of Jennico,' 47,000; 'Young April,' 44,000; 'Richard Yea-and-Nay,' 23,000.

Messrs. Williams & Norgate announce that the translation by T. Bailey Saunders of Professor Harnack's 'Das Wesen des Christentums' will be published immediately under the title 'What is Christianity?' It will be included in their new series of the 'Theological Translation Library.'

'The Truth about Newfoundland' is the title of a book by Mr. Beckles Willson, to be published by Mr. Grant Richards on February 26.

Mr. Arthur L. Humphreys, of Piccadilly, has published, at one penny, 'Questions of Empire,' by Lord Rosebery, a reprint of a recent address delivered by his lordship at Glasgow.

The new number of the Novelist is Mr. Robert Barr's stirring story 'In the Midst of Alarms.'

Messrs. Ellis & Elvey have just published Part III. of the 'Poems of Dante Gabriel Rossetti'—'The Stream's Secret,' 'Jenny,' 'Eden Bower,' &c.—one of the very attractive little volumes in the 'Siddal' edition of Rossetti's works with photogravure portrait.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

Prince Hohenlohe has been for some time occupied in writing his memoirs. Their publication is not likely to take place until the disappearance of some of all the personages mentioned in them. Of their interest there can be no doubt whatever.

The Pope is said to be at work on a poem designed to celebrate the advent of the twentieth century. Leo XIII. intends this poem to be a Christian 'Carmen Sæculare,' in which he has imitated the manner of Horace.

The Congregation of the Index has recently published a revised and considerably augmented edition of the list of books which no good Catholic ought to read. Kant, Heinrich Heine, Frederick the Great, and the historian Gregorovius are put on the Index as heretics, with Émile Zola and Henrik Sienkiewicz. As, however, this volume only contains those prohibited works published 'since the year 1600,' it should seem that it is rather a supplement to the Index than a new and complete edition of it.

A curious historical monograph, entitled 'Die Urkundenfälschungen des Reichskanzlers Kaspar Schlick,' von Alfred Pennrich, is one of the new publications of F. A. Perthes, Gotha. It treats of a remarkable personage, one of the foremost statesmen of the 15th century, Kaspar Schlick, Chancellor of the Empire, the first layman who attained that exalted position. The result of Herr Pennrich's researches into the documents only recently made accessible is the astonishing discovery that Kaspar Schlick was a wholesale forger of title-deeds, especially titles of nobility (Adelsurkunden). This discovery will cause a great sensation; for the Chancellor's family still exists, and is one of the most distinguished amongst the nobility of Bohemia.

One of the oldest and most esteemed of French periodicals, which can boast of the respectable age of 235 years, is discontinued. The periodical in question is Le Journal des Savants. It was subsidised by the French Government with an annual payment of 25,000 francs, but the item has been struck out of the budget for 1901, and so the old periodical must come to an end. As it has not kept pace with the great periodicals of the present day it has become superfluous, and is, indeed, almost forgotten, and could only go on with State aid.

A contribution to our knowledge of Turkish history in the last quarter of the nineteenth century is announced by H. Lamertin, Brussels, entitled 'La Turquie sous Abdul Hamid II (31 Août 1876-1 Sept. 1900),' by Charles Hecquard.

Herr W. H. Kühl, Berlin, sends us his 'International Marine-Bibliographie, No. 5,' containing a catalogue of the most important new publications of all countries in naval architecture, marine engines, artillery and torpedo construction, with full titles, descriptions, and prices.

Herr Karl W. Hiersemann, Leipzig, sends us his Katalog 254, containing full titles, with particulars and prices of books on South America, historical, geographical, ethnographical, and philological, and also maps and views.

We have received Centralblatt für Bibliothekswesen (Leipzig: Harrassowitz), containing articles on the Imperial public library in St. Petersburg, on cataloguing parliamentary papers, on a bookseller's stock in the year 1538, on the condition of the libraries of Roumania, together with the usual variety of information about libraries, also reviews and notices of new publications, &c. This periodical maintains the high level it long since attained.

The music-publishing business of the late Herr Bartholf Senff, Leipzig, having been offered for sale by auction, was knocked down to Fräulein Marie Senff, a niece of the late proprietor, for 220,000 marks (about £11,000).

DINNER OF THE PUBLISHERS AND BOOKSELLERS.

We are able to say that it has been decided to have a Trade Dinner some time in May next. Committees of the Publishers' and Booksellers' Associations have been appointed to carry out the arrangements, and we are sure everyone will be glad to hear that Mr. Shaylor and Mr. Darton have kindly consented to give their services. It is the intention on this occasion to confine the attendance entirely to members of the trade.

H.M. STATIONERY OFFICE AND THE NET BOOK SYSTEM.

As a result of representations of the Publishers' and Booksellers' Associations to H.M. Stationery Department, we are glad to say that the Department has cancelled the clause in the form of contract which stipulated that a ten per cent. discount was to be allowed off net books.

It is very satisfactory indeed to find the Department falling into line in this way on the net book question, and the action of the Comptroller has given great satisfaction and is much appreciated by the trade.

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

No. 4.—SAMUEL RICHARDSON, 1689-1761,
concluded.

Thus Samuel Richardson pursued the even tenour of his way till 1740, when two members of the trade—Mr. Rivington and Mr. Osborne—proposed to him to undertake for them a literary work rather more interesting than 'indexes and dedications.' Here is his own account of the affair: 'Two booksellers, my particular friends, entreated me to write for them a little volume of Letters in a common style on such subjects as might be of use to those country readers who were unable to write for themselves. "Will it be any harm," said I, "in a piece you want to be written so low, if we should instruct them how they should think and act in common cases as well as indite?" They were the more urgent with me to begin the little volume for this hint. I set about it, and in the progress of it wrote two or three letters to instruct handsome girls, who were obliged to go out to service, as we phrase it, how to avoid the snares that might be laid against their virtue. And hence sprung "Pamela, or Virtue Rewarded."'

Evidently 'Pamela' 'sprung' from the 'two or three letters' and not from the volume suggested by R. and O. which was a separate work.

Fielding ridiculed 'Pamela' in his 'Joseph Andrews,' and Richardson ever afterwards spoke very bitterly of his rival. It is curious that neither of these two admired writers (of totally different schools) could discover the least merit in each other's works. Fielding laughed at the 'puny Cockney bookseller pouring out endless volumes of sentimental twaddle,' and held him up to scorn as 'a moll-coddle and a milksop.' Richardson said that 'had he not known Fielding, he should have believed the author of "Joseph Andrews" to have been an ostler.'

'The first four volumes of "Clarissa Harlowe," with a preface by Warburton, appeared in 1747, and the last four by the end of 1748. This work soon won for him a European reputation.'—D.N.B. Mrs. Barbauld says she 'very well remembers a Frenchman who paid a visit to Hampstead for the sole purpose of finding out the house in the Flask Walk where Clarissa lodged, and was surprised at the ignorance or indifference of the inhabitants on that subject. The Flask Walk was to him as much classic ground as the rocks of Meillerie to the admirers of Rousseau.'

His next and last great work was 'Sir Charles Grandison,' which was received with great enthusiasm. Mr. Knight, with prophetic vision, says: 'I fear there will never be a revival of three-volume novels in large type, of the devotion which rarely wearied of a story told in some three or four hundred epistles. I lately asked at a country circulating library for "Clarissa" and "Sir Charles Grandison," and the worthy caterer of literary novelties told me he had never heard of these books.' 'Clarissa' was originally published in eight volumes, and has frequently been reprinted since Mr. Knight's time in the same number of volumes and in other forms. As to 'three-volume novels,' they have had a tremendous vogue since he wrote in 1865, but now in 1901 it can truly be said, as he said then, 'there will never be a revival of them.'

Richardson, like John Dunton, had cause to complain of the want of copyright in Ireland. He had hurried forward the printing of 'Sir Charles Grandison,' in order to be the first in that market, but he was beaten. The sheets were stolen from his printing office, and three Irish booksellers (Dunton's 'Felonious Lee' may have been mixed up with them) each published cheap editions of nearly half the work, before a volume appeared in England. He had heard an Irish bookseller boast that he could procure from any printing office in London sheets of any books printed in it, and while it was going on. Mr. Richardson was very indignant, and observed that 'a greater degree of probity in effect a sinecure.' The new Master's weak health had for some time necessitated a vegetarian and water diet.

An imprisoned debtor wrote to him in praise of 'Sir Charles Grandison,' which he said had in a few hours 'done for him what five years' imprisonment, with all the want and indigence imaginable annexed to it, could not do.' Another correspondent, one Eusebius Sylvester, wrote to him in a similar strain, praising his books, flattering his vanity, and begging for a loan. Richardson replied to this latter in a long letter, sent him £25, and apologised for the smallness of the loan on the score of many calls upon his purse.

Mrs. Piozzi, in 'Johnsoniana,' says: 'We were talking of Richardson, who wrote "Clarissa." "You think I love flattery," says Dr. Johnson, "and so I do; but a little too much always disgusts me; that fellow Richardson, on the contrary, could not be contented to sail quietly down the stream of reputation without longing to taste the froth from every stroke of the oar."'

As a proof of Richardson's good nature, Dr. Johnson gives a curious instance. 'I remember writing to him from a sponging house, and was so sure of my deliverance through his kindness and liberality that, before his reply was brought, I knew I could afford to joke with the rascal who had me in custody, and did so over a pint of adulterated wine for which, at that instant, I had no money to pay.'

Richardson never allowed his immense popularity as a writer to interfere with his business occupation as a printer. He regularly attended his office in Salisbury Court, and he was evidently in very prosperous circumstances. He had lived in a country house at North End, Hammersmith, for many years. In 1754 he removed to Parson's Green, Fulham, where he entertained many of his friends.

The accompanying picture of this house is from an old engraving in my possession dated 1799. It bears the inscription which is now underneath it. But as 'Clarissa' was published in 1747-48, it could not have been written in 1754—I cannot vouch for its authenticity.

In 1757 his eldest daughter, Polly, was married to Mr. Philip Ditcher, a Bath surgeon, she died a widow in 1783; Patty, who acted as his amanuensis, was married after her father's death in 1762 to a Mr. Bridgen; and Sarah, the youngest, to a Mr. Crowther. Nancy, the third daughter, died unmarried in 1803, the last survivor of the family.

'I have a very good wife,' said Richardson to Edwards, 'I am sure you think I have. But the man who has passed all his days single is not always a loser.' In another letter he writes, half playfully: 'Many who think they know us well (God help them, or rather God help me!) imagine I carry every point, so meek my wife! Be quiet, standers by, you don't always see more than those who play. Let me warn you to doubt your own judgments when you take upon you to decide in favour of the yielding qualities of a meek wife, not obstinacy itself is more persevering!'

THE HOUSE AT FULHAM IN WHICH RICHARDSON WROTE 'CLARISSA

(From an old Engraving by J. P. Malcolm, 1799)

might be expected from booksellers, on account of their occupation in life and connections with the learned. What then should be said of Messrs. Eckshaw, Wilson, and Saunders, booksellers in Dublin, and perpetrators of the vile act of piracy? They should be expelled from the Republic of Letters, as literary Goths and Vandals who are ready to invade the property of every man of genius.'

Dr. Johnson wrote of Richardson, who had contributed one or two papers to the 'Rambler,' as 'an author who had enlarged the knowledge of human nature, and taught the passions to move at the command of virtue.'

In 1754 he was chosen Master of the Stationers' Company, all the duties of which he was well fitted to perform, says Mrs. Thomson, except that of hearty participation in the banquets. 'I cannot but figure to myself,' said Thomas Edwards, 'the miserable example you will set at the head of the loaded tables, unless you have two stout jaw-workers for your wardens, and a good hungry Court of Assistants. Yours indeed is an example which, were the Company to follow, your cook's place would be

It need not be inferred from this that Richardson was not an affectionate husband; there may have been occasional exhibition on both sides of incompatibility of temper, that is all. 'His esteem for his wife,' says Mrs. Thomson, 'is further proved by the fact that he appointed her one of the executors of his will, which he made in 1757. His increasing infirmities can scarcely have improved a temper naturally irritable and exacting.'

He was seized on a Sunday evening with a most severe paralytic stroke, and after lingering unconscious for two days he died on July 4, 1761. He was buried beside his first wife in the middle aisle of St. Bride's Church, which had witnessed the baptism of all his children.

I may properly conclude this rapid sketch by quoting his own portrait of himself:

'Short, rather plump, about five feet five inches, fair wig, one hand generally in his bosom, the other a cane in it, which he leans upon under the skirt of his coat that it may imperceptibly serve him as a support when attacked by sudden tremors or dizziness which too frequently attack him, but not, thank God! so often as formerly; looking directly fore-right, as passers by would imagine, but observing all that stirs on either hand of him without moving his short thick neck; hardly ever turning back; of a light-brown complexion, teeth not yet failing him, smooth-faced and ruddy-cheeked; at some times looking to be about sixty-five, at other times much younger; a regular even pace, stealing away the ground rather than seeming to rid it; a grey eye too often overclouded by mistiness from the head; by chance lively, very lively it will be if he have hope of seeing a lady whom he loves and honours.'

THE LATE MR. LEWIS A. ROBERTS OF ROBERTS BROS.

'Mr. Lewis A. Roberts, for years senior member of the well-known publishing business of Roberts Brothers, died January 17, at Lakewood, N.J. Mr. Roberts was born in England, in 1834, and came to this country in early youth. He learned the trade of bookbinding, to which, when he went into business on his own account, in a small way, at the lower end of State Street, Boston, he added the manufacture of blank books. Later he took his two brothers into partnership and organised a general jobbing business under the name of Roberts Brothers. In 1859 this business was sold out, and Mr. Roberts went to London, where he first saw photograph albums. He immediately arranged for their manufacture in this country, and was quite successful in the introduction of those once so profitable articles of trade. In 1862 he organised a publishing business with his brothers. Mr. Hall, of the firm of Whittemore, Niles & Hall, was induced to join the firm of Roberts Brothers, and in 1863, Thomas Niles, Mr. Roberts's brother-in-law, was also persuaded to join the new publishing house. Mr. Niles from the start was entrusted with the details of publishing, and how well he succeeded is a matter of history. The first books published with the imprint of Roberts Brothers were printed from the stereotype plates of C. S. Francis & Co., of New York—the first volume being 'Fairy Tales.' In 1872 Mr. Niles was taken into the firm and successfully and practically took over the management of the publishing department.'—New York Publishers' Weekly.

MR. JOHN SLARK.

Mr. Slark, who has been connected with the firm of Messrs. Gibbings & Co., of 18 Bury Street, Bloomsbury, for some years, has retired, and we think that many of his old friends will be glad to see his latest portrait, and to know that he is still in fair health, and yet maintains much of his wonderful activity and vigour.

Mr. Slark was born in Newgate Street, in 1821, and in September 1835, was engaged by Mr. Thomas Hamilton, of 33 Paternoster Row, he making the ninth assistant, the business at that time being a comparatively small one.

MR. JOHN SLARK

With industry and perseverance he passed through every department, and on the retirement of Mr. Adams from the road he was honoured with the task of succeeding him in the country, a position that he held for twenty-seven years.

In 1877 he started business on his own account as publisher and remainder dealer, building up a steady and successful trade with the patronage and goodwill of all his old customers in London and the country.

In 1891 he relinquished this, selling his stock and copyrights to Mr. W. W. Gibbings. Two years after he joined Mr. Gibbings, and when the business was turned into a company he acted as one of the directors, and later as secretary, which position he filled up to the beginning of this year.

We feel confident that anyone who has been brought into contact with Mr. Slark at any time during his long and honourable business career of sixty-five years will congratulate him on his retirement and wish him long life to enjoy his well-earned leisure.

Those who know him best will be sure that his footsteps will often turn towards Bury Street, where he will be always welcome, and where he will have to be from time to time, to look after the welfare of some publications in which he has still an interest, notably the books of Dora Greenwell.

HOW A YANKEE MOVES JOHN BULL.

'I have been making rather a careful study this summer of advertising as it is conducted in England,' said Mr. Post, of the Postum Cereal Co., in a recent interview. 'It is well enough known that English do not use the newspapers as largely as the American advertiser for the reason that the newspapers do not render equally good service with the American publisher. The average English newspaper devotes the first page to classified advertising that every reader instinctively avoids, unless he may be looking for a maid, butler, or the sailing of some ship. The editorial page of some of the best English newspapers is devoted to a similar line of advertising that absolutely no one will wade through unless they are in search of something they may find in the classified columns. The British publisher, with his dogged determination to stick to the ways of his fathers, refuses to make the advertising part of his paper attractive, so as to win readers, but he is inclined to treat the advertiser as a necessary evil—very necessary and very evil. He feels that he should be hid as much as possible and an apology should by rights be printed at the top of every page, asking the sufferance of the readers for the advertising matter that is published, through necessity. The result of this attitude on the part of the English newspaper has been to drive the advertiser to advertising methods outside of the newspapers. I have been pleased to observe that the English newspaper publisher is slowly receding from his cast-iron position and is accepting some American advertising to be run on American lines. I have succeeded in breaking down some of the ancient rules that have been maintained since the time of George III. by offering some heavy advertisements to be run only in the manner indicated, being careful not to go too far away from their old rules. It may be of interest to note that we sold about seven hundred cases of goods in London within thirty days after our first advertisements were placed, and the bulk of this sale came during the last ten days of the month.'—Publicity.

'MORE IN ANGER THAN IN SORROW.'

'The familiar question of To Cut or Not to Cut? is debated once more by the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR. Our own reply, uttered more in anger than in sorrow, is Cut! The virtue of uncutness is a mere superstition in all but those special cases where ceremony seems ennobling to a noble volume. But to issue a six-shilling novel in an uncut state is merely to shirk the completion of the book, and to invite wrath and evil-speaking from the reader. Minor poetry, too, should always be cut. It often amuses us to find a young poet, essayist, or novelist timidly and almost tearfully appealing for a hearing in his preface and leaving his wares shut up, and impregnable to all but the strongest paper-knife and the sweetest patience.

'We doubt, after all, whether uncut pages can be ultimately defended even in "the book beautiful." An uncut book is an unfinished book. We are aware that pretty things can be said about cutting books, and that the strokes of the paper-knife are considered by some as equivalent to a book-lover's caresses of a new love—but how often does the love prove worthy of such attentions?'—Academy.

COPYRIGHT IN CANADA.

A special despatch to the New York Evening Post, dated Montreal, January 23, says: 'The Divisional Court at Toronto has given judgment, holding that no English copyright applies to Canada without specific registration of the article in this country.'

WHY GIRLS READ BOYS' BOOKS.

The Chicago Tribune publishes the following very interesting article upon the subject mentioned above:

'Within the last thirty years an entire new literature has grown up in this country in the shape of books specially written for boys and girls. Juvenile books now constitute perhaps one-third of the total holiday output of the publishing houses. A curious feature of the case is found in the fact that there are three or four books for boys where there is one for girls. Why should this be so? Boys are no more given to reading than girls are, if so much. Yet every year shows an increasing discrimination against the feminine half of our youthful readers. An actual count of the juvenile books received by the Tribune reviewer since the opening of the fall season shows a proportion of nearly five to one in favour of the boys' books of adventure.

'An explanation for this state of affairs is offered by Everett T. Tomlinson, a writer of juveniles, in the November Atlantic. He says the girls are reading the boys' books, and rather prefer them to the milder and more preachy books written especially for girls. He cites the case of a maiden of twelve who recently made out a list of sixty-eight "favourite books," at the request of a prominent librarian. Twenty-seven of the sixty-eight were books written especially for boys and only eight were books for girls; the rest were works equally well adapted to either class. Thus, while few boys can be found who will read books written for girls, the converse is markedly true, and the sisters are reading their brothers' books with almost as much avidity as the boys themselves. The publishers have not been slow to note the fact, and are issuing an increasing number of books that appeal to boys and girls alike. The distinction between the two classes of books is rapidly disappearing.

'Mr. Tomlinson explains these changes by ascribing them to the more active outdoor life of the girl of to-day. The days when girls remained indoors and worked samplers and guarded their complexions have ceased to be.

'Girls and boys now hold their own together on the golf links, on the tennis grounds, or with the bicycle. Girls go to see athletic games and are themselves acquainted with the gymnasium. As a natural consequence, the literature of action, which appeals so powerfully to boys, has its attraction for the girls as well.

'The change is only the most recent step in the movement away from the artificial and often mawkish Sunday school books of a generation ago, which was the beginning of modern juvenile fiction. The time seems to have come when girls as well as boys demand fiction characters with red blood in their veins, and neither is content with the promise of an early demise and a cherub carved on his or her tombstone. It is a matter for congratulation that healthful juvenile books of the newer and better kind are to be had in abundance.'

BOOKSELLERS' SEASIDE HOLIDAY HOME.

THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE.

It is a great satisfaction to the Committee of the Booksellers' Seaside Holiday Home to report that the receipts from all sources show an increase, while the total number of visitors in the past year has been larger than ever, the number being 253 adults and children as against 197 last year, making a total of 1,404 in all since the institution was first opened. The Committee trust this gratifying increase shows that as the Home becomes better known it is more appreciated. They are especially pleased to note that a greater use has been made of the establishment during the winter months, and they sincerely hope all those interested in the undertaking will endeavour to bring it to the notice of principals, as a home of rest for the winter months, and not only as a resort for the summer season.

The Committee gratefully acknowledge a handsome present of twenty-four framed pictures from Mr. Brooke, of Bradford; and they thank the proprietors of the Athenæum, Bookseller, PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, and News-vendor for their continued interest in the institution.

PRINTERS' PENSION CORPORATION.

The Anniversary Festival, under the presidency of Mr. G. F. McCorquodale, will be held at the Hôtel Métropole on Wednesday, June 26. The names of gentlemen willing to become Stewards upon the occasion will be thankfully received by Mr. Joseph Mortimer, Secretary, Gray's Inn Chambers, 20 High Holborn, W.C.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

From Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co., Limited.—'Life of Her Majesty Queen Victoria,' by Millicent Garrett Fawcett. (In Memoriam edition.) Mrs. Fawcett's biography of our late lamented Queen was written in the Diamond Jubilee year, 1897. The author thought it best to dwell on the formative influences on the Queen's character in her early life, and on political and personal events of her later years only in so far as they illustrate her character and conception of her political functions. The task of no little difficulty she undertook to perform Mrs. Fawcett conscientiously and successfully executed, and her labours resulted in the production of an interesting and instructive history of the good Queen, from her birth on May 24, 1819, until the early months of 1897. To this has been added by the publishers in the In Memoriam edition a final chapter, bringing the narrative down to the last day and hour of a long and beneficent life and reign, which ended at Osborne on January 22, 1901, at 6.30 P.M. Mrs. Fawcett's 'Life of Queen Victoria' is a very pleasant and trustworthy little book.

From the Art and Book Company, London and Leamington.—'Memoirs of Georgiana, Lady Chatterton, with Passages from her Diary,' by the late Edward Heneage Dering. Second edition. 1901. This new and beautifully printed edition of a charming book appears appropriately at this time of mourning for our good and gracious Queen Victoria, for in it we find many pleasant traits and anecdotes of her late Majesty, both while Princess and Queen, and some characteristic stories of good old King George III., who was perhaps the most revered and beloved of our monarchs with the exception of Victoria the Good. The volume before us opens with Lady Chatterton's diary, which carries us back to a period long before the memory of any now living, embodying as it does the recollections of her mother, Mrs. Iremonger, who told her many amusing stories of her own youthful days when George the Third was King, in some of which good-natured Farmer George is seen to great advantage, and very interesting traits of character are related. Lady Chatterton also gives us pleasing pictures of court and society life in her own girlhood in the time of George IV. and William IV., during which last-named monarch's days she experienced much kindness at the hands of the Princess Victoria and the Duchess of Kent. She was much struck by the Princess's wonderful memory and quickness of ear for music, of which instances are given. But space forbids dwelling on interesting matter for readers of all tastes to be found in the Diary and the latter chapters of this delightful volume written by Lady Chatterton's second husband, the late Mr. Edward Heneage Dering. Two beautifully executed portraits of the writers adorn this attractive book, the get-up of which is in all respects excellent.

From Messrs. Burns & Oates.—'Mary Ward: a Foundress of the Seventeenth Century,' by Mother M. Salome. The interesting details of a life spent during a period of much tribulation for the Roman Catholic Church are here given, and the position that Mary Ward took up in withstanding the dangers that beset members of her faith is admirably defined. 'Mary Ward,' says the author, 'was a great Englishwoman. In her character were combined that loftiness of ideal, with strenuous energy and excellent common sense, which have distinguished the most eminent men and women of the race.' The contemplation of such a personality can scarcely fail to be of good result.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Demosthenes on the Crown,' with critical and explanatory notes and historical sketch and essays, by William Watson Goodwin. The chief object which the editor of this edition has had in view has been the elucidation of those points which are of most practical importance to the student. Such a one, he points out, 'needs a connected narrative, in which he will find a detailed account of the events which specially concern him, with copious references to the authorities, without being distracted by other details in which he has no immediate interest.' To supply this want a large portion of the volume—some seventy-five pages—have been devoted to an historical sketch of the period from the accession of Philip to the battle of Cheronea, in which the chief side issues have been fully enlarged upon. There are also a number of essays displaying both classical scholarship and painstaking investigation. The notes printed at the foot of each page afford much valuable information, while avoiding mere discussion of grammatical points. The volume in its entirety will be warmly appreciated by all classical scholars, who can scarcely fail to appreciate the untiring industry and enthusiastic energy which has given it birth.

From Messrs. Chapman & Hall.—'Plastic Methods for Plastic Minds: a Teacher's

Handbook of Easy Lessons in Modelling in Plasticine for Infants and Young Children,' by Mrs. Wm. Harbutt. The title of this little book fully denotes its character. Plasticine, it may be explained, is a new substitute for clay, possessing none of its disadvantageous properties, and being cleanly and inexpensive. Mrs. Harbutt's directions for its school use are rendered still more intelligible by a number of illustrations. Messrs. Chapman & Hall sell the Plasticine by the pound; it looks like green putty, and smells like scented soap.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus. — 'Max Thornton,' by Ernest Glanville. There is a breezy air of exhilaration in the opening chapters of Mr. Glanville's story, and this is well maintained, with scarcely an interval, until the close of the narrative. As in other of his works, the author takes us to South Africa, where, with the war as a background, he has constructed a series of as thrilling incidents as the most ardent lover of adventure could desire. The hero, Max Thornton, a spirited lad of nineteen, being prevented from catching the steamer at Durban, joins two scouts, Abe Pike and Ted Willet, in a trip across Pondoland to East London. From the very first their path is beset with dangers, and these gradually increasing as they proceed, the reader is eventually worked up into such a state of frenzied excitement that it is almost a relief when the story comes to an end. Various incidents of the war are introduced to excellent effect, and Abe Pike and his two companions are soon in the thick of it. The villain of the plot is one Piet Marais, otherwise known as Swaart Piet, and a most unscrupulous, bloodthirsty ruffian he is. It is satisfactory to find at the finish that he comes by his death in the fiendish way he had premeditated for another man. The story is one that should especially interest a boy, seeing that it is full of movement and that brave deeds are at a premium. Several illustrations by Mr. James Shaw Crompton form a fitting accompaniment to the text.

From Mr. W. B. Clive. — 'The Preceptors' Latin Course,' by B. J. Hayes, M.A. Camb. and Lond. This well-arranged guide to the study of the Latin language forms one of the volumes of the well-known Preceptors' Series. It is mainly planned to facilitate the training of beginners in the accurate use of language; which, the author states, is now generally acknowledged as the chief benefit the majority of beginners can derive from the learning of Latin. With this object in view the syntactical rules have been given at greater length and are more fully explained than is usual in elementary grammars. The exercises and vocabularies contributed by Miss F. L. D. Richardson (Mrs. A. J. Herbertson) are admirably suited to the purposes of this useful manual, which should prove a valuable aid both to teachers and learners.

From Mr. Henry J. Glaisher, Wigmore Street. 'Graphology Made Easy: a Manual of Instruction in Character Reading from Hand-writing,' by R. Dimsdale Stocker, with numerous explanatory autographic examples and appendix by Ina Oxenford. Like most books that affect to render the sciences perfectly intelligible to the multitude, this treatise requires no slight amount of brain concentration if any permanent advantage is to be derived from its perusal. But it is undoubtedly interesting, and one of its most entertaining features is the 'illustrative examples' of Ina Oxenford, the character of certain well-known men in various walks of life, such as Sir Redvers Buller, S. J. Solomon, Sir Squire Bancroft, Sir Henry Irving, Charles Dickens, Thomas Carlyle, Archibald Forbes, Anthony Hope Hawkins' and so forth, being told from their signatures. Strangely enough, our previous estimate of none of these men differs in any way from the attributes here assigned to them.

From Messrs. Greening & Co. — 'Ballads of Ghostly Shires: Folk-Lore Verses,' by George Bartram. The uncanny subject of these verses seems to be thoroughly congenial to the author, and he chants his lay, so to speak, with every appreciation of their weird effect. No John Wellington Wells engaged in the work of weaving magic and spells ever entered into his occupation with more entrancing fervour. The book is decidedly clever, and the ballads possess a vitality and vigour that should render them very attractive to lovers of verse.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers. — 'The Monster, and other Stories,' by Stephen Crane. Those readers who have been under the impression that the late Mr. Crane's skill lies only in the description of thrilling war episodes will be pleasantly introduced in this volume to another and widely divergent phase of the author's literary ability, namely his sympathetic observation of child life. From the horrible it is of course almost impossible for him entirely to divorce himself, but he has woven into the majority of these tales such a bright seam of juvenile portraiture that the whole aspect of the narrative is lit up and brightened. 'The Monster' is the story of a negro at Syracuse, U.S.A. Like most of his kind, he is amusingly conceited, but when the occasion arises he exhibits the pluck of a true man. In endeavouring to rescue his young master from a fire he is terribly injured about the face—to such an extent that he is awful to look upon; hence the title of the story. The father of the lad on whose behalf he has nearly lost his life staunchly stands by him, and in doing so incurs the enmity of his friends and neighbours, who are anxious that the poor fellow should be put in confinement. There is not much substance in the story, and readers we fancy will marvel somewhat at the abrupt character of its conclusion, but the humour with which the narrative is so richly endowed is sufficient to keep them thoroughly interested and amused. The volume contains seven stories in all, of which the last three, discarding the juvenile element, revert to Mr. Crane's best-known method. It is particularly well illustrated.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton. — 'The Self-Educator in Chemistry,' by James Knight, M.A., B.Sc., edited by John Adams, M.A., B.Sc. The object of this work is sufficiently indicated by the title. It is designed to enable the student, without help of any other kind, to cultivate a knowledge of the science of chemistry. The book, therefore, is simple and practical in all its details, and there is no lack of diagrams to enforce the descriptions of the text. After an introduction, in which the author proffers much valuable advice in the manipulation and selection of apparatus to his prospective readers, we enter upon the actual subject with a consideration of the atomic theory, then branch off to the topics of chemical nomenclature, the characters of chemical action, the constituents of water and air, oxidation and combustion, carbon and its oxides, the distillation of coal, &c., and in later chapters are introduced to the subjects of sulphur and chlorine, the nitrates and phosphates, the metals, the chemistry of foods, and the general chemistry of the carbon compounds. The volume as a whole seems skilfully adapted to serve the purpose aimed at, and as a guide to the ordinary student will prove of excellent service.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons. — 'Troddeles and Us, and Others,' by R. Andom. The light-hearted frivolity of this volume is very seductive, though possibly here and there a trifle forced, and the reader who can get through its contents without frequently breaking into loud laughter must be destitute of humour indeed. A more irresponsible set of eccentrics than Troddeles and his three friends never existed. They are perpetually getting into some form of scrape, and in their quieter moments they keep up their reputation by practising jokes on one another. Troddeles is the only stout member of the party, but if there be any truth in the old adage 'laugh and grow fat' then they should each have been perfectly mountainous. To the general hilarity of the entertainment the illustrations of Mr. C. Harrison effectively contribute, and the book as a whole may be warmly recommended to those in need of complete relaxation.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd. — 'Popular Royalty,' by Arthur H. Beavan. Cheap edition. Surely so handsome and at the same time so cheap an edition of such an acceptable work as that before us has seldom, if ever, been published. Mr. Beavan gives us an attractive and touching picture of the life, and especially of the home life, of our lamented good and gracious Queen Victoria. The narrative begins with the birth of the infant daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Kent, so soon and so sadly followed by the death of her royal father, and is brought down to 1897, the year of the Diamond Jubilee. It contains many well-told anecdotes, in which we continually find instances of Queen Victoria's kindness of heart and sympathy with and thoughtfulness for others. The loss which the nation has so recently sustained adds a poignant interest to these traits of character, but they carry their own consolation with them. Readers will peruse with unalloyed pleasure other portions of the work in which are recorded the lives of various members of the Royal Family, and especially those chapters devoted to the Prince and Princess of Wales, now Their Most Gracious Majesties King Edward VII. and Queen Alexandra. By special permission of our late lamented Queen, H.I.M. the Empress Frederick, and other members of the Royal Family, this beautiful work is lavishly illustrated and embellished with admirably reproduced portraits and views, and is so handsomely printed and bound that it ought to find a place on every drawing-room table throughout the Empire.

From the same. — A publication that should gladden the hearts of all thrifty and intelligent housewives is Good Housekeeping, of which the above firm have become the agents in this country. It must not be inferred, however, that the magazine treats solely of matters appertaining to the culinary art, for this is not so. The broad question of housekeeping in its numerous and varied branches is considered, and, while due attention is paid to the subject of cookery, other and more intellectual developments of the question are not lost sight of. The number before us contains articles on 'Good Housekeeping for People of Moderate Means,' by Julia Ward Howe, 'Where the Help Problem is being Solved'—an admirable article on the efforts being made on the other side of the Atlantic towards the training of girls for domestic service—and numerous other papers touching on the decorative, educational, medical, and administrative aspects of the housekeeping question. Accompanying the text are a large number of beautiful illustrations, all of which contribute towards making this one of the most attractive magazines of the day.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'The Empire Review,' edited by C. Kinloch Cooke. 'There is little doubt that if succeeding issues of this magazine reach the high standard of the February number a permanent addition to our periodical literature has been launched. A great point in its favour is that it enters practically upon unexplored ground, and its avowed object of fostering unity, and providing a special platform for the discussion by recognised authorities of matters concerning that great estate in which every subject of the King possesses a life interest, should elicit the warm support of all patriotic Britishers throughout the Kingdom. The post of honour in the first number is given to the Duke of Devonshire, whose article on 'The British Empire' shows to what useful purpose the magazine can be turned in the interests of the nation. Among other important and interesting papers are 'The Settlement in South Africa,' by (1) the Right Hon. Lord Windsor and (2) the Hon. John Tudhope, late Colonial Secretary, Cape Colony; 'Imperial Reserves,' by the Right Hon. Sir Charles Dilke, Bart., M.P.; 'Victoria as I left it,' by Lord Brassey, K.C.B.; 'Our Naval Strength,' by Rear-Admiral Fitzgerald; and 'The C.I.V.s on Active Service,' by Major-General Mackinnon, late Commandant of the Regiment. The entire number, however, is exceedingly uniform in the attractive character of its contents, and Mr. Kinloch Cooke may sincerely be congratulated on the skill he has shown in its preparation.

From the same.—'The Pioneers,' by Fenimore Cooper. This volume has apparently been published a little out of sequence, since 'The Prairie,' the story which completes the famous series of 'Leather-stocking Novels,' was noticed in these columns several weeks ago. In one respect it differs from the majority of Fenimore Cooper's works, in that it contains a distinctly humorous personage—Benjamin Pump. The central figure, however, is the gaunt, aged Leather-stocking, whose career, so picturesquely commenced in 'The Last of the Mohicans,' is brought to an impressive close in 'The Prairie.' The present edition of this 'Leather-stocking Novel' has many good qualities to recommend it, paper, printing, and binding being alike excellent, while the illustrations of H. M. Brock, though not perhaps quite appropriate to the rough, vigorous surroundings of the story, are exceedingly artistic and clever.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Zincoli: an Account of the Gypsies of Spain,' by George Borrow. We have previously spoken in terms of high praise of the new edition of George Borrow's works. This, the latest volume, well sustains the reputation of the series. Beautifully printed and tastefully bound, it affords the book-lover the opportunity of adding to his library a standard work in a much more convenient form than when originally published. The half-tone and photographic illustrations of Mr. A. Wallace Mills are a distinct attraction to the volume.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'Divine Clues to Sacred Prophecy: an Expanded Outline of Four Bible Readings given in Croydon,' by the Rev. E. H. Horne, M.A. The author of this little work exhibits a thorough acquaintance with his subject, and this has rendered his book in its various aspects extremely interesting. A number of diagrams are included, with explanatory notes at the end of the volume. Those who would know something of the Divine guidance of prophecy could scarcely do better than consult Mr. Horne's work.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'From May Flowers to Mistletoe: a Year with the Flower Folk,' by Sarah J. Day. Though there is, perhaps, no great depth of poetic feeling in these lightsome verses, they have a bright sunny tone that in itself proves no inconsiderable charm. Each well-known flower is represented by a few lines of verse, and probably no better method of indicating the merit of this volume could be found than to quote the following, which is very characteristic in its dainty simplicity of the author's muse:—

'The Crocus had slept in his little round house

So soundly the whole winter through;

There came a tap-tapping,—'t was Spring at the door;

"Up! up! we are waiting for you!"

'The Crocus peeped out from his little brown house

And nodded his gay little head;

"Good morning, Miss Snowdrop! and how do you do

This fine, chilly morning?" he said.'

The volume is distinguished by a very pretty and appropriate binding, and in the matter of its production reflects great credit on its publishers.

From the Religious Tract Society.—Various works relating to her late Majesty Queen Victoria have reached us from this Society. Foremost among them is 'Under Queen Victoria's Reign: a Sketch of British Progress, 1837-1901,' by F. M. Holmes, W. J. Gordon, and D. J. Legg. This contains a brief survey of the great progress made during Her Majesty's reign in the departments of art, literature and journalism, science, the navy and mercantile marine, industrial trades, and religion and philanthropy. The volume contains upwards of sixty illustrations, including a fair proportion of portraits. 'Pictures and Stories from Queen Victoria's Life, 1819-1901,' by Mrs. O. F. Walton, has the advantage in its previous edition of being specially approved of by Her Majesty, who suggested several improvements which have now been carried out. There are also a large number of illustrations to this book, many being by well-known artists, such as Gilbert, Whymper, Pritchett, Boot, and Ralston. In 'The Life and Reign of Queen Victoria, Mrs. Emma Leslie has summarised the chief events of the Queen's reign, and her quick sympathy and womanly insight has capably guided her in the work of selection. The little work, first published in the Jubilee year, was very successful in its original form, and has now been revised and brought down to date. Other works on the subject of Her Majesty, published by the Religious Tract Society, are 'Victoria, R.I.: a Story of her Personal Life,' by Dr. James Macaulay; and 'The Queen Victoria Booklet,' a record of the chief events in the reign of Queen Victoria. These by reason of their contents and popular price are well adapted for general distribution.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'Social Service Ideals: a Programme for the New Century,' by Rev. J. Paterson Smyth, B.D., LL.D. 'One half the world doesn't know how the other half lives,' and we might add with equal truth, doesn't care. But Mr. Smyth thinks that much of this selfish indifference arises from ignorance, and he devotes himself in the first of these papers to a consideration of the 'Social Evils at the Close of the Nineteenth Century'; in the second he discusses the important question of 'Character and Environment'; while in succeeding chapters he has something to say on 'Individual and Social Religion,' 'Social Service in the Bible,' 'The Ideal and the Real,' 'The Function of the Church,' and 'The Need of Study and of Common Sense.' Finally, he indulges in 'A Vision of the New Century.' This shows the culmination of all the various movements for social reform that are now in progress. It is an entrancing sight, and may well make the heart grow sad. But if Mr. Smyth is rather more enthusiastic and sanguine in his estimate of future events than seems justifiable, there is little doubt that he has written a very interesting series of essays, embodying lessons that are worthy the attention of every thoughtful reader.

From the University Correspondence College Press, Cambridge.—'Matriculation Directory, No. XXIX., January 1901,' with list of textbooks, including the special subjects for June 1901 and January and June 1902. We have frequently had high praise to bestow on previous issues of this directory, and the same may be extended without reservation to the present issue. It is likely to be of the greatest assistance to intending candidates for the matriculation examination at the University of London, for it not only gives the papers set in January 1901, but their complete solution by members of the University Correspondence College tutorial staff.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'The Mind of the Century,' reprinted from the Daily Chronicle. This handy volume contains an introduction and sixteen essays by competent writers on as many subjects in Literature, Science, and Art, 'written,' as the introduction says, 'on broad and general lines so as to show only the tendencies of human effort and production within the century.' It seems unfortunate that the articles were limited by the exigencies of newspaper publication. For to do full justice within such narrow limits to some of the matters dealt with were manifestly impossible. Under such circumstances the writers may be congratulated on the use they have made of the space at their disposal.

From Messrs. H. Virtue & Co.—'The Convalescents' Diet: How to Provide and Prepare It,' by Lucy Helen Yates. This little book supplies some useful suggestions regarding the diet of patients suffering from diarrhoea, dyspepsia, neuralgia, anæmia, and kindred complaints, as well as a number of recipes for preparing refreshing and restorative drinks. It will be found of great service in the sick-room, and even those who are in a robust state of health would be none the worse for studying its pages, on the ground that prevention is better than cure. The advice addressed to dyspeptics is especially timely, and the various recipes seem thoroughly practical, and—what is of great advantage—easily prepared. Altogether a very instructive little manual.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

* In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: 1 inch = 2½ centimètres.

A SIXPENNY EDITION OF JOHN INGLESANT. By J. H. SHORTHOUSE.

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. Bishop E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D. (late of Exeter)

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

IMPORTANT

ALL who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the

Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

ESTABLISHED 1837

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following:—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some HUNDREDS OF OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

For One Year, post-free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland .. 8s. 6d.
 „ Six Months ditto ditto 4s. 6d.
 „ Three Months ditto ditto 2s. 6d.
 To America and the Continent, the Annual Subscription, including postage 11s. 0d.

G. P. Putnam's Sons' New Books & Announcements

CONCERNING CHILDREN. By CHARLOTTE PERKINS (STETSON) GILMAN, Author of 'Women and Economics,' 'In this our World,' &c. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s.

This book deals intimately and in a daringly original way with the education of children and the duties of parents. Mrs. Gilman is not wholly upon the side of the parents, but recognises and enunciates the principle that children have their rights and privileges, that respect is due to youth, age is too often presumptuous and exacting.

MOBY DICK; or, the White Whale. By HERMAN MELVILLE, Author of 'Typee,' 'Omoo,' &c. With Introduction by LOUIS BECKE. Illustrated. Four Full-page Plates. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s.

WHITE JACKET; or, the World in a Man-of-War. By HERMAN MELVILLE. With Four Full-page Illustrations. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6s.

THE ART OF REVOLVER SHOOTING. By WALTER WINANS, Vice-President of the National Rifle Association of Great Britain. With 100 Illustrations from Drawings by the Author and from Photographs. 8vo. cloth extra, 21s. net.

THE LAWS OF SCIENTIFIC HAND-READING: a Practical Treatise on the Art commonly called Palmistry. By WILLIAM G. BENHAM. With about 800 Illustrations. 8vo. cloth, 18s. net.

The book is primarily a guide to hand-reading, and is so clearly written that the veriest novice may, by a careful study of its text and illustrations, become thoroughly acquainted with the art.

SAINT LOUIS (LOUIS IX. OF FRANCE). The Most Christian King. By FREDERICK PERRY, M.A., Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. cloth, 5s. ['Heroes of the Nations' Series.]

DANIEL O'CONNELL, and the Revival of National Life in Ireland. By ROBERT DUNLOP, M.A. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 5s.

THOMAS HENRY HUXLEY: a Sketch of his Life and Work. By P. CHALMERS MITCHELL, M.A. With Portraits. Crown 8vo. cloth, 5s.

HULDREICH ZWINGLI (1484-1531): the Reformer of German Switzerland. By SAMUEL MACAULEY JACKSON, LL.D., D.D., Professor of Church History, New York University, Editor of the Series. Together with an Historical Survey of Switzerland before the Reformation by Professor JOHN MARTIN VINCENT, Johns Hopkins University; and a Chapter on Zwingli's Theology by Professor FRANK HUGH FOSTER, University of California. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo. cloth, each 6s.

Previously published in this Series:

MARTIN LUTHER. By HENRY EYSTER JACOBS.

PHILIP MELANCHTHON. By JAMES WILLIAM RICHARD.

DESIDERIUS ERASMUS. By EPHRAIM EMBERTON.

THEODORE BEZA. By HENRY MARTYN BAIRD.

['Heroes of the Reformation' Series.]

A HISTORY OF THE PEOPLE OF THE NETHERLANDS. By PETRUS JOHANNES BLOK, Ph.D., Professor of Dutch History in the University of Leyden. Translated by RUTH PUTNAM. To be completed in Five Parts. 8vo. cloth. Each Part 12s. 6d.

Part I. From the Earliest Times to the Beginning of the Fifteenth Century.—Part II. The Gradual Centralisation of Power, and the Burgundian Period.—Part III. The War of Independence, 1568-1621.

THE PAPACY IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY: a Part of 'The History of Catholicism since the Restoration of the Papacy.' By FRIEDRICH NIPPOLD. Translated by L. H. SCHWAB, Rector of the Church of the Intercession, New York. 8vo. cloth, 10s. 6d.

A HISTORY OF POLITICAL PARTIES IN THE UNITED STATES: being an Account of the Political Parties since the Foundation of the Government, together with a Consideration of the Conditions attending their Formation and Development; and with a Reprint of several Party Platforms. By JAMES H. HOPKINS. 8vo. cloth, 12s. 6d.

ANNOUNCEMENT LIST NOW READY

JOHN C. NIMMO'S LIST OF NEW BOOKS

A New Illustrated Work on the Social Life and Diversions of London from the Restoration of King Charles II. to the Accession of her late Majesty Queen Victoria. The era which began with the latter great event inaugurated a revolution in social England which, among greater matters, transformed the nature of its amusements. Anyone seeking conviction as to the completeness of that transformation will find that athletics of all kinds have assumed the place they fill in modern life since Queen Victoria came to the throne; while of the organised amusements of London during the period covered by this work two only survive in a recognisable form to-day—the Play and the Social Club.

In Two Volumes, small 4to. cloth, gilt top, with 12 Illustrations from Contemporary Sources, Coloured by Hand, price 30s. net.

THE AMUSEMENTS OF OLD LONDON:

Being a Survey of the Sports and Pastimes, Tea Gardens and Parks, Playhouses, and other Diversions of the People of London from the Seventeenth to the Beginning of the Nineteenth Century.

By WILLIAM B. BOULTON.

DUCK-HUNTING. By S. Alken.
SADLER'S WELLS THEATRE.

GUARDIAN.—'Two charming and thoroughly attractive volumes, with the great recommendation that they are as pleasant to read as the illustrations are excellent as works of art.'
MORNING POST.—'We gain many delightful pictures of Old London, and, with Mr. Boulton's assistance, are able to conjure up scenes that must excite the envy of the modern dweller in the great city. The work gives evidence of much painstaking investigation, and a number of lively anecdotes add to its engaging qualities, which are further increased by hand-painted illustrations from contemporary prints.'
GLASGOW HERALD.—'The period covered has been chosen with sound judgment. The author has gone to the right sources, to the contemporary memoirs and letters, to the periodical literature of the last century, and the results of this industrious literary digging are presented in a series of chapters instinct with actuality and full to overflowing with facts of the most curious kind. An attractive feature of the work is to be found in the illustrations, admirable reproductions, all from contemporary sources, and coloured by hand.'

One Volume, super-royal 8vo. Uniform with 'The Quorn Hunt and its Masters.' With 28 Illustrations, chiefly drawn by Henry Alken, 12 of which are Coloured by Hand. Cloth, gilt top, price 21s. net.

A HISTORY OF STEEPLE-CHASING.

By WILLIAM C. A. BLEW, M.A.

Author of 'The Quorn Hunt and its Masters,' Editor of Vyner's 'Notitia Venatica' and Radcliffe's 'Noble Science of Fox Hunting.'

DAILY NEWS.—'Altogether one of the most sumptuous and interesting of recently published books on sport. The volume abounds in biographical details of famous riders.'
COUNTY GENTLEMAN.—'One of the best features of the book, apart from its literary and historical merit, is the hand-coloured plates of steeple-chasing scenes. Altogether the most valuable work on the subject now extant.'

One Volume, demy 8vo. cloth, gilt top, with 7 Photogravure Plates and 6 Portraits, price 10s. 6d. net.

REMINISCENCES OF A FALCONER.

By Major CHARLES HAWKINS FISHER, of the Castle, Stroud, Gloucester.

FIELD.—'Major Fisher has long been known as one of the most accomplished falconers of the age, and perhaps no one has been more successful than he has in training hawks to kill grouse and partridges. The illustrations form an attractive part of the volume, which we cannot doubt will prove acceptable not merely to professed votaries of the falconer's art, but to all who would give encouragement to English field sports.'
DAILY CHRONICLE.—'His book is noteworthy for its admirable descriptions of the various fights; whether his hawks are flying grouse, woodcock, partridge, blackcock, plover, pigeon, rook, crow, sparrow-hawk, kestrel, or merlin, the vividness of the picture he draws of the manner of the attack, and of its evasion by the quarry, is always life-like, and mentally carries the reader to the open downs or moorland, whence he strains his eyes to make out the falcon stooping from the sky a quarter of a mile above his rushing, twisting victim.'

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S SPRING LIST

The Survivor. 6s.

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM, Author of 'A Millionaire of Yesterday,' 'The World's Great Snare,' &c.

'The Survivor' should be one of the books of the year. Mr. Phillips Oppenheim has an immense public which knows it can depend upon him for stories as exciting, if not more exciting, than any other living writer's, but which are at the same time thoroughly wholesome. But 'The Survivor' is a great intellectual advance on Mr. Oppenheim's part and puts him at once in the front rank of our best novelists.

The Mayor of Littlejoy. 6s.

By FRED C. SMALE.

'The Mayor of Littlejoy' is the most comical, quaint, and delightful book that has appeared since 'Vice-Versa.' No one is so welcome as a new humourist, and Mr. Smale has many of the good qualities of Mark Twain, F. Anstey, Jerome K. Jerome, and W. W. Jacobs.

Scoundrels & Co. 3s. 6d.

By COULSON KERNAHAN, Author of 'Captain Shannon,' 'God and the Ant,' &c.

A detective story which is simply crammed with excitement, adventure, humour, and mystery. For sheer breathless excitement and sheer sensation it should be one of the most popular books of the year.

Days of Doubt. 3s. 6d.

By A. M. MEADOWS, Author of 'Out from the Night,' 'The Eye of Fate,' &c.

No living novelist can concoct a more impenetrable mystery than Miss Meadows. The reader who once begins 'Days of Doubt' will never rest until he has solved the problem before him; and the solution of the mystery is as strange as the mystery itself.

The Emu's Head. 3s. 6d.

By W. CARLTON DAWE, Author of 'A Bride of Japan,' 'The Voyage of the "Pulo Way."'

As strong and fascinating a story of exciting adventures in the backwoods of Australia as Mr. Rolf Boldrewood at his best.

Edward Blake, College Student. 3s. 6d.

By CHAS. M. SHELDON, Author of 'In His Steps' &c.

The author of 'In His Steps' bids fair to repeat his first great success with 'Edward Blake.' Here is the same intensely interesting story, with the same uplifting Christian teaching, but in 'Edward Blake' Mr. Sheldon has widened his field and faced many of the terrible problems of to-day. It appeals at once to the religious and to the secular public, as a fine story, finely told.

In preparation. Ready at once

My Indian Queen. 5s.

By GUY BOOTHBY.

'My Indian Queen' will attract very unusual attention, for it shows one of the most popular of living novelists in an entirely new light. Mr. Boothby has left the South Seas and the Nineteenth Century, and takes us back to the founding of the East India Company. From the literary point of view he has never done anything so fine as this, and in the matter of adventure it is even better than his famous Dr. Nikola stories.

MAX PEMBERTON'S GREAT ROMANCE Pro Patria. 6s.

MRS. L. T. MEADE'S NEW NOVEL A Race with the Sun. 5s.

Dedicated to all those inspired persons who quarrel among themselves whilst attempting to instruct the world by means of religious novels.

THE MASTER SINNER. By A WELL-KNOWN AUTHOR.

* * This extraordinary work is by a clever writer whose identity is certain to be widely discussed by all readers of latter-day religious novels. Followers of all denominations and creeds will read the book with unalloyed interest, and there can be no doubt it will be much talked of. It is a scathing satire upon other so-called 'religious' novels.

BRITAIN'S AUSTRAL EMPIRE

Portraits of the STATESMEN and OFFICIALS concerned in the work of establishing the COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA. The Portraits, FROM LIFE, drawn by PERCY F. S. SPENCE. The Letterpress by G. FIRTH SCOTT.

The book will consist of 40 Photogravures 7 x 4½ inches, while the Letterpress will be printed on Imperial Hand-made Paper at the well-known Chiswick Press. The whole will be contained in a Portfolio of White Vellum and Cloth, ornamented with a design by Mr. SPENCE. Only two hundred and fifty copies will be available in this form.

The price will be £4. 4s. net.

This work it is hoped will be ready for delivery during the Duke of Cornwall and York's Visit to Australia.

The Illustrations, reproduced by Photogravure, will be Portraits drawn (where possible) from life of all the leading Statesmen, Imperial and Colonial, and officials connected with the Federal movement from its inception to the culmination, and, at the same time, the termination of its career, by the issuing of the Royal Assent to the Australian Commonwealth Enabling Bill.

The Artist of the Portraits and Drawings is Mr. PERCY F. S. SPENCE, a native of Sydney, N.S.W., whose exhibits at the Royal Academy for the last two years have obtained favourable notice, and whose black-and-white work is well known, not only in his own country, but also here in Great Britain and in America. Of his paintings two are in the National Gallery of New South Wales; while his portrait sketch of Robert Louis Stevenson was purchased by the Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery, London.

The Letterpress, which will consist of a brief outline giving the salient features of the Federation movement in Australia, and an account of the various personalities whose influence has been from time to time a dominant factor in its development, will be by Mr. G. FIRTH SCOTT, whose 'Romance of Australian Exploring' and other works dealing with Australia are well known.

MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS

And WHO WROTE THE CASKET LETTERS. By SAMUEL COWAN, J.P., of the Perthshire Advertiser.

The literature in connection with this historical subject has been abundant, while the interest taken in it by the public has been unabated. The research of the past century has done much to develop what has hitherto been an obscure and unsolved problem. The calendars of State Papers published by H.M. Stationery Office, and free access to the State Paper Archives, have been an immense boon to students of history. These have enabled the public to acquire information not otherwise obtainable. The forthcoming work gives a history of the Life and Reign of the Queen of Scots, from her accession to the throne in 1561 until her death. This period includes some of the most remarkable chapters in the history of Scotland, e.g. the murder of Darnley; the Bothwell marriage; the betrayal of the Queen at Carberry Hill; her abdication and escape; the Casket Letters; the Babington Conspiracy; all these have been controversial questions in Queen Mary's life.

The author, who has spent some time in the examination of State Papers, has recorded these events accompanied by his own criticism; and purchasers of the work will have the benefit of obtaining, not only the result of the latest investigations, but a considerable amount of correspondence and other matter never before published. Amongst the latter are the official list of Queen Mary's jewels and the remarkable correspondence which took place on that subject with the Regent Morton and the Earl and Countess of Argyll. There will also be included for the first time the letters of Queen Mary to the Earl of Cassillis. The work will also include a review of the arguments of some of Mary's accusers, with a critical digest of the events above-named.

A special feature of this work will be the Illustrations. It will contain Sixteen Photogravures of the Queen, all more or less famous portraits, and some of them never before published.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAVURE ILLUSTRATIONS.—Mary Queen of France and Scotland (Versailles Collection)—The Hamilton Palace Portrait (Mr. F. A. Bevan)—Queen Mary (from the Imperial Collection, Versailles)—The Thirlstane Portrait (Lord Napier and Ettrick)—The Janette Portrait (Mrs. Alfred Morrison)—The Blair's College Second Portrait—The Czartoryski Portrait (Paris: Braun, Clement & Cie.)—The Hampton Court Portrait, by DAN MYTENS—Mary Stuart, aged 17, by Sir A. MORE (Lord Salisbury)—Mary Stuart, aged 19, from a silver coin, 1561—The Cassillis Portrait (Lord Ailsa)—The Carberry Tower Portrait (Lord Elphinstone)—The Edinburgh Castle Portrait—The Louvre Portrait (Saugavey Collection)—The Workington Portrait (Sir H. Curwen)—The Morton Portrait (Earl of Morton)—Pendant Medallion of Mary and Francis II.

Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY'S

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

A TRIENNIAL CATALOGUE

COMPLETING THE CENTURY.

There are Three very good reasons why this Volume should be pressed forward as quickly as possible:—

First.—Because it rounds up and completes the Catalogues of the Books of the Nineteenth Century.

Second.—It forms the Sixth Volume of a Series which began with the same year as that in which her late Majesty came to the throne, and now ends with what will ever be known as the Victorian Era.

Third.—The last and most urgent need for pressing it forward is that of the three Annual Volumes which it will embrace, with much additional matter, the first, that for 1898, is quite out of print; the second, that for 1899, may also be said to be out of print, for there are only very few copies left; whilst the present volume for 1900 has been wholly subscribed for before publication.

Of course with the utmost pressure this TRIENNIAL VOLUME cannot be ready for some months, the amalgamation, re arrangement, and the addition of new matter requiring very great care and much time.

It is hoped that the price of this volume will not exceed Twenty-five Shillings, but this cannot be definitely fixed yet.

AMBIDEXTROUS AND FREE-ARM BLACKBOARD DRAWING AND DESIGN

By F. F. LYDON, Author of 'Model and Blackboard Drawing'; Art Master, Parmiter's School; People's Palace School of Art; and Tottenham Training College. Crown 4to. 5s. [Ready.]

This work, in addition to a fully illustrated description of the forty-eight graduated plates, which are designed as a progressive course in free-arm drawing and design, gives numerous photographic blocks and diagrams illustrative of the method of work described, and of the best ways to fit up the class-room for the study of this subject. The letterpress shows how the subject may be inexpensively introduced into any school, and made an accessory to the ordinary drawing lesson. The forty-eight exercises, which begin with the simplest curves and work up to examples of floral design, are also issued as four packets of drawing cards suitable for class teaching. All the copies, as befits the subject, are effectively reproduced white on a black background to represent actual blackboard drawing.

MODEL AND BLACKBOARD DRAWING

By F. F. LYDON. Crown 4to. 3s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

Designed to cover the new requirements of the Board of Education in both the subjects of which it treats.

The book consists of 44 Plates, which divide themselves into three classes dealing respectively with the geometric models proper, common objects based on them, and blackboard exercises, treated boldly, and reproduced white on black. There are 52 pages of descriptive letterpress, in which the usual difficulties of the student are fully dealt with.

ORIENTAL RUGS

By J. K. MUMFORD. With 16 Colour Plates from Selected Rugs, and 16 Artotypes and Photo-engravings. Large 8vo (8 x 11½). Two Guineas net.

'Oriental Rugs' is the brief title of a most valuable and interesting work by John Kimberley Mumford. Twenty years ago fine specimens of antique Oriental rugs were readily obtainable, now perfect antique specimens are growing scarce. The author is a collector of rugs, and by years of study has become recognised as an expert. He has travelled widely through the East, collecting material for this work, which contains sixteen photochromes (colour-plates) produced by a new process, eight artotypes of designs rather than colours, eight half-tone illustrations from the author's photographs, and two maps. These, with the text of over 300 pages, form a superb quarto volume, in handsome binding. Price, Two Guineas net. [Nearly ready.]

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING

The above is the title of an American magazine for the publication of which we have been appointed Agents. The price is Sixpence monthly, and it may certainly be regarded as a marvel of cheapness. The illustrations are numerous, and quite equal to those of any magazine in existence.

THE HIDDEN SERVANTS, and other very Old Stories. Told over again by FRANCESCA ALEXANDER, Author of 'The Story of Ida,' 'Roadside Songs of Tuscany,' &c. Crown 8vo. 231 pages, printed on hand-made paper. Title in red and black, etched frontispiece. Cloth gilt, gilt top, edges trimmed, 6s. net.

* Miss Alexander's name is familiar to, and beloved by, all lovers of Italy, and all lovers of Ruskin. These exquisite retellings of Italian religious 'leggende' are redolent, as Miss Anna Fuller justly says in her charming preface, 'of the grace of the author's adopted people—their sunny charity, their native sense of the beautiful, their childlike faith.'

A GARDEN OF SIMPLES. By MARTHA BOCKÉE FLINT. Crown 8vo. 307 pp., title in red and black, art linen and boards, top gilt, edges trimmed, 6s. net.

* The garden in which these simples are culled for the delight of a generation that has lost all feeling for simplicity and tranquillity is a 'colonial' one—one of those gardens of old New England and old New Holland, in which, with far greater tenacity than in the parent countries, old ways, ideas, recipes, fancies lingered on, prolonging the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries through the eighteenth, well into the nineteenth century. Mrs. Flint, like all true devotees of the garden, is a devotee of the older English literature of flower and herb. Two of the most charming of her score of essays are 'A Posy from Spenser' and 'Flowers from Chaucer's Poems.'

TOWN AND COUNTRY POEMS. By A. E. J. LEGGE, Author of 'Sunshine and Smoke,' 'Wind on the Harpstrings,' &c. Crown 8vo. 101 pages, cloth, top gilt, uncut, 3s. 6d. net.

HEARTSEASE: a Cycle of Song. Crown 8vo. Printed at the Constable Press. Parchment, uncut, 2s. 6d. net.

Also 12 copies on Japanese vellum and bound in fine vellum, of which 8 are for sale at 10s. 6d. net.

* The publisher believes that lovers of poetry and true critics will recognise in the writer, a woman, one with a rare capacity for the expression of 'simple and passionate' emotion. He does not think he is claiming too much in asserting that many of these lyrics recall, not unworthily, Heine, and the greatest English follower of Heine.

A WOMAN TENDERFOOT. By GRACE GALLATIN SETON-THOMPSON. With Drawings by Ernest Seton-Thompson, E. M. Ashe, Ch. Ed. Hooper, Rob. Wagner. Square 8vo. profusely illustrated and bound in specially designed cloth cover, 6s. net.

* In this volume Mrs. Seton-Thompson gives a vivid and humorous account of her experiences whilst accompanying her husband in the wildest districts of North America.

* Mrs. Seton-Thompson's experiences are likely to stir the liveliest envy and admiration. Her exploits with the gun and in the saddle are prodigious, and told with admirable gravity and humour. —ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

* There will be few who do not admire, sympathise with and, perhaps, envy the youth, strength, courage, and high spirits which radiate from the writer's personality. —DAILY GRAPHIC.

* Every word tells her for what she is—a level-headed, sound hearted, unassuming American lady, as full of fun as she is of courage. —KING.

* One of the most brightly written and readable of books. —DAILY NEWS.

* Altogether a fascinating book. —WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

The Bible for the Young

A SERIES FOR SCHOOLS AND FAMILIES.

By Rev. J. PATERSON SMYTH, B.D., LL.D.

Author of 'How we got our Bible,' 'How to Read the Bible,' &c.

The GUARDIAN says of the first volume: 'Packed with thought; very far above the average standard of Sunday School lessons.'

THE aim of this series is expressed by the Latin motto in the Introduction: Placere—Docere—Movere. The writer has a strong conviction that it is absolutely necessary to make Bible study interesting if children are to profit by it. And also that it is possible. Readers of his previous books, which have done so much to popularise the Bible story, will easily believe that he has succeeded in this respect. The characters are made to live before us. We feel the excitement of battle in the Story of the Judges. The lump rises in our throats when Jacob and Joseph meet; and all through the final purpose is never forgotten, 'to move the heart towards the love of God, and the will towards the effort after the beautiful life.'

But it is under the second head, Docere, that the main characteristic of the Series appears. The writer warns all who teach the Bible to children 'to be thoroughly truthful, to assert nothing as certain which is not certain.' His parochial experience has deeply impressed on him the danger arising from 'the flippant scepticism so common now-a-days, which makes jests at the story of the sun standing still, and talks of the folly of believing that all humanity was condemned because Eve ate an apple thousands of years ago.' He sees that its evil influence on people arises from the crude and narrow teaching of the Bible in their youth, and he urges his readers not to talk of Bible difficulties, but to 'teach the truth that will take the sting out of these difficulties when presented in after-life.'

'The First Edition of this book having been sold out at once, and the type distributed, I would fain have allowed it so to rest and been thankful.

'The urgency, however, of I fear injudicious friends has led to the production of a Second Edition, to which I assented with some misgiving, but the more readily because it at least affords me the opportunity of expressing my best thanks to my readers and the whole round of the Press for the generous reception given to my unambitious little book.'—THE AMATEUR ANGLER.

The following is a selection from Press Opinions already received:

'There is humour in this delightful little book, many shrewd angling hints, glimpses of romantic scenery, and much quiet diversion.'—STANDARD.

'We are always glad to hear from "The Amateur Angler." We remember making acquaintance with him for the first time in "Dovedale," and the recollection is a very pleasant one. . . This book is as pleasant to read as its predecessors.'—SPECTATOR.

'Another of his pleasant and pretty volumes. . . Market by the same appreciation of nature and the same imperturbable good humour. . . May he long continue to spend his holidays on the Itchen and the Ithon, and to record his adventures for the benefit of those who are less fortunate.'—ATHLETIC.

'An Old Man's Holidays' is perhaps the most delightful, as it is the most diverse, of the series which began with "Days in Dovedale," and revealed in its author a humourist as gentle and as genial as Charles Lamb.'—WORLD.

'Extremely bright, and told with a ring of sportsmanlike enthusiasm and love of Nature's beauty which is very taking.'—COUNTRY GENTLEMAN.

'There is a peculiar charm about Mr. Marston's writings which it is not easy to define.'

'Adorned by many touches of humour, quiet literary grace, and keen observation.'

'There is always a warm welcome ready for anything "The Amateur Angler" may choose to publish. The world is not so full of sweet and gracious spirits like him that it can afford to miss any of his gentle messages.'—DAILY EXPRESS.

'We have nothing but praise for "The Amateur Angler's" little book.'—COURT CIRCULAR.

'To any overworked business man, pining for a spell of rest, and a whiff of pure country air, I heartily recommend "An Old Man's Holidays." It is better than a week at the seaside, and ever so much cheaper.'—YORKSHIRE WEEKLY POST.

'The charm of the book consists in a certain almost boyish vivacity, and it possesses moreover, a delicate literary flavour.'—LEEDS MERCURY.

EXAGGERATION OF THE DANGER OF INFECTION FROM BOOKS AND PERIODICALS CIRCULATED BY THE FREE LIBRARIES.

It would be a serious matter were there any substantial grounds for fearing the spread of infection through books and periodicals issued to the public by the Free Libraries. Warnings with regard to this supposed danger appear from time to time in the press, and the 'fear of contagion' bogey has been not unsuccessfully worked in some of those communities which still believe in the pauperising influence of the public library.

To say that books will not spread infection would be as absurd as to charge them—as has sometimes been done—with being its chief medium of propagation. Some time ago the officials of the library of the medical faculty at Bordeaux were attacked by a severe kind of hay fever, and there was an outcry in consequence about the danger of infection from books. But the febrile indisposition, combined with headache and violent irritation of the mucous membrane of the eyes, nose, and windpipe, which attacked the librarians of Bordeaux was not caused by the circulation of their books, but because they never had been circulated. Not before it wanted it, the Bordeaux Medical Library was re-arranged; this naturally disturbed the immense accumulations of dust, and it was this dust which made the officials ill, and not the books. If there had been boxes or bottles on the shelves the same dust would have accumulated, and it would have yielded the same 'large percentage' of vibrios and micrococci.

No sooner was this epidemic among the Bordeaux librarians made known than quite alarmist reports circulated as to illness produced by book-dust, and, as Dr. Obst pointed out recently in the German book-trade organ, the Allgemeine Buchhändler Zeitung: 'It suffices that a noted French professor should have reported illness caused by book-dust to give rise to a cry of war against the use of libraries.' The learned doctor goes on to point out that bacilli requiring moisture cannot live or propagate on ordinary dry paper—the bacillus of cholera dies in twenty-four hours on dry paper, and the micrococcus of consumption in thirty-six.

On the other hand, some of the most deadly microbes seem to thrive in dry surroundings, including those of diphtheria and typhus—the latter is said to retain its vitality even after three months' desiccation—the experiments with the bacilli of measles and scarlet fever are not yet concluded, but there can be little doubt of the wisdom of the thorough disinfection, if not destruction, of books and magazines which have been used by fever patients.

Professor Lion has made an exhaustive examination of a large stock of library books new and used, of writing paper, blotting paper, bank notes, postage stamps, in fact, paper of all kinds in common use, and found that the microbes present on a square centimetre varied in number from 100 to 2,400, well-thumbed library books and bank notes proving the richest field; such figures are alarming, but at the same time we must not forget that on an endless number of common objects with which humanity comes into daily contact the number of germs is found to be just as large, and in many cases much larger.

The main point to bear in mind is that per se paper is absolutely no feeding ground for microbes, it is only when it is contaminated by dirt, as in books and periodicals much used out of free and other libraries, that it acts as a propagator of disease. Even then a few diseased cows or a contaminated water supply will do more to spread infection in a town in a year than all the books and magazines circulating in it for a hundred years.

As a precaution against possible exposure of books to infection, librarians are urged to put a notice inside each to the effect that it must not be used by patients suffering from or recovering from infectious disease. It ought not to be necessary to do this, but we all know how thoughtless, not to say careless, many people are in this respect.

Another notice which each book issued from a free or public library—and some private ones also for that matter—ought to contain is a delicate reminder that the habit of wetting the finger or thumb, or both, in order to turn the leaves over, is not only dirty but dangerous—5,000 mixed microbes to the square inch.

As Dr. Obst points out, it is absurd to talk of shutting up free libraries because books or magazines may possibly convey infection like other things. On the other hand, it is equally foolish not to take all possible precaution for preventing books becoming exposed to infection, and to keep them clean is one of the chief.

THE SPRING PUBLISHING SEASON.

As will be seen from our pages this week, there is no likelihood of any book-famine in this country, no fear that the springs of literature are drying up—men may come and men may go, but books go on for ever.

Some of those announced are important or appear to be, but we cannot say that there is anything extraordinary on the spring literary horizon of 1901. Probably some quite unnoteworthy announcement heralds the book which will be all the rage in a month or two's time. Who would have imagined that 'An Englishwoman's Love-Letters' would take the world by storm?—Mr. Murray did not, for he had only prepared a comparatively small edition. The little book is a 'net' one, and, although it has proved such a great catch, we are glad to know that Mr. Murray has had but one single instance of its being sold at a discount brought to his notice.

Some of the publishers are not ready with their spring announcements; these will be given in another number of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

At a meeting of the American Publishers' Association on February 13, it was decided to adopt the net book system, the same to come into force on May 1, 1901. In all its main features the system will be the same as that in force in this country—in fact it is our system with some modifications.

Messrs. A. & C. Black have published in their series of 'Guild Text-Books' a new and cheaper edition of 'Bible Manners and Customs,' by the Rev. G. M. Mackie, M.A., for twenty years missionary of the Church of Scotland at Beyrout, and at sixpence this excellent little manual is now within easy reach of the members of Bible classes. His long residence in the East enabled Mr. Mackie to give colour and life to the common objects and occupations referred to in the Bible.

'Mary Queen of Scots, and Who Wrote the Casket Letters?' The above is the title of a new work by Mr. Samuel Cowan, the result of life-long study. The earlier part of Mary's career is rapidly sketched, but from the time of her coronation the narrative becomes full and minute—and the portion relating to the Casket Letters is especially valuable, the question of authenticity and authorship being discussed with complete knowledge and critical acumen. A particular feature of the work will be the portraits, of which there will be sixteen produced in photogravure, several of them hitherto unpublished. The work will be issued by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, during the coming season.

* *

Mr. M. M. Shoemaker, an American author, has nearly finished an important illustrated work on the Palaces, Prisons, and Resting Places of Mary Queen of Scots. The author conceived the idea of picturing a pilgrimage to every important place of residence or imprisonment of the unhappy Queen. There will be some fifty illustrations, photogravure plates and others. Commencing with Linlithgow, Mary's birth-place, Mr. Shoemaker takes us to Stirling, the scene of the coronation of the infant Queen of Scotland, to Inchmahome, and her 'child garden,' to Brittany and her residence in France, then back to Scotland to Edinburgh and Holyrood, and the flight to England. From Loch Leven 'Palaces' disappear, and the reader is carried chiefly to 'Prisons,' until the final betrayal at Fotheringhay, and the burials at Peterborough and Westminster complete the tragic story. The volume will be published in two editions, one of which will be limited to 375 copies only, and will be issued by H. Virtue & Co., Ltd., 'Art Journal' Office, Ivy Lane, London, and by Mr. W. Brown, Princes Street, Edinburgh.

* *

'A History of the Church in Scotland from the Earliest Times down to the Present Day,' by John Macpherson, M.A., is the title of a new work which Mr. Alexander Gardner, of Paisley, has just ready for publication.

* *

Messrs. Sands & McDougall, of Melbourne, have sent us a law book of considerable importance. It is entitled 'The Law of No-Liability Mining Companies in Victoria,' by D. E. Braysbay, barrister and solicitor to the Supreme Court, and D. Berriman, chief clerk of the Court of Mines, &c., at Heidelberg. The work has been compiled more especially for the use of legal managers, professional gentlemen, and those interested in No-Liability Mining. It is an octavo volume of about 200 pages cloth. Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. are the London agents.

Messrs. Methuen are about to publish a Commentary on Psalm cxix., entitled 'The Way of Holiness,' by the Rev. R. M. Benson, M.A., of the Cowley Mission, Oxford. The object of this Commentary, which is a brief explanation of the Psalm with occasional devotional thoughts interspersed, is to obviate the meaningless monotony with which it is to be feared people often recite it. Each of its leading words has a distinct theological meaning assigned. A key to the interpretation is derived from the mystical meaning which by common consent is given to the various numbers, and as each of the twenty-two sections derives its number from the value of the letter in the Hebrew alphabet, this number is recognised as supplying the intention of the several sections. This also gives a fresh signification to the same phrase when it occurs over and over again. There is in the manual no exercise of fanciful mysticism, but merely the application for exegetical purposes of well-accredited principles. It supplies for the ordinary reader what is probably not to be found in any of the larger commentaries.

Last week we mentioned in a note that Mr. Downing, of Birmingham, was offering a complete set of Scott and a substantial revolving bookcase to hold the set, for £2, and we said: 'What can the bookcase be made of? It sounds wonderfully cheap.' We have since received from Messrs. A. & C. Black a prospectus of the edition of Scott in question (the Victoria edition), and we see that they supply it at £2 net, 'with a substantial revolving bookcase stained green'—so that is how it is done. An illustration in the prospectus shows an attractive, strong-looking bookcase, which looks worth the money without the set of Scott.

'Ballads of Battle,' by 'Oriol' (John Sandes), is the title of a small volume of very bright and inspiring songs on the South African campaign. It was issued in Melbourne 'to furnish a small memento of the stirring events and glorious achievements of those Australian troops who have on many a battle field cemented with their blood the unity of the Empire.' Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd., are the London agents.

An important work which has been many years in preparation has just been published by Mr. Alexander Gardner, of Paisley, entitled 'Itinerary of King Edward I. throughout his Reign, A.D. 1272-1307, exhibiting his Movements from Time to Time so far as they are recorded,' edited and annotated by Henry Gough, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-law. In two 4to. volumes with six maps.

Messrs. Methuen have just published a new long novel by Mr. Henry James entitled 'The Sacred Fount.'

An interesting illustrated article on 'Osborne and Kensington' appears in the March number of The House. It seems that the original name of the manor in the Isle of Wight was Austerborne, or East Borne, or perhaps, though less likely, Oyster Bourne, from the oyster beds near. Other illustrated articles are on Modern Silver and Modern Pottery, as well as the useful hints to amateurs in the Home Arts and Crafts series.

A third edition of Sir Archibald Geikie's work on the 'Scenery of Scotland viewed in connection with its Physical Geology' will be published at once by Messrs. Macmillan, in a form revised from the second edition of 1887, and with the addition of new maps.

Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co., of Essex Street, Strand, have nearly ready by Mr. Nathaniel Gubbins a little work entitled 'Dopes,' a criticism of American Arts English and Efforts. That a book was badly needed on this burning question goes without saying, and in Mr. Gubbins we have a man who brings a long experience to bear on what may be called the inner life of the turf and its curious developments. What is a 'Dopes,' or what are they? Some new internal complaint of American horses probably; we have not the remotest idea, but it is evidently a burning question.

Many of the purchasers of the first and second editions of the Stevenson Letters have expressed a wish to possess a copy of the three letters added in the third and cheaper edition of the work. Messrs. Methuen will be happy to present copies of the three letters to those who bought copies of the first and second editions provided application is made through the bookseller from whom the volumes were originally purchased.

Six editions of the first part of 'The Life and Times of Queen Victoria,' published by Messrs. Cassell & Co., have already been called for, and the demand for the part continues unabated. A large Rembrandt photogravure portrait of Queen Victoria (17 in. by 14 in.) is presented with this part.

* *

There has also been a very large demand for Mrs. Oliphant's 'Queen Victoria: a Personal Sketch,' several editions having been exhausted.

* *

Two new editions of Walton's 'Complete Angler' in one week! Messrs. Macmillan & Co. send us a most attractive edition not only of the 'Angler' but also of Walton's exquisite biographies of Donne, Wotton, Hooker, Herbert, and Sanderson in one volume, being a new volume in their 'Library of English Classics.' It has a brief biographical note by Mr. Alfred W. Pollard, and makes a handsome demy 8vo. edition for the Library, being printed in good type on the new featherweight paper.

* *

Then Messrs. Gay & Bird have published in their series of 'Sportsman's Classics' a very dainty little edition of the 'Angler,' beautifully printed by Messrs. Constable, of Edinburgh, with quaint chapter headings and binding. It weighs only about as much as a quarter pound, and will go into the pocket of one's fishing coat. Walton is well honoured already in the first year of the new century.

The Antiquary for March will contain articles on 'Pagan Myths and Christian Figures' by W. H. Jewitt; 'Dante's Illustrations from Animal Life,' by Rev. W. C. Green; 'The Early History of an Old Provincial Newspaper,' 'Three Book Collectors,' by W. Carew Hazlitt; 'Prisoners of War in England a Century Ago,' by G. N. Godwin.

Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co., Ltd., have in preparation a reprint of Hughes's 'Dictionary of Islam,' which they hope to publish during the spring season.

The Rev. J. Austin Jenkins and Mr. R. Edwards-James have completed the work upon which they have been engaged, and will publish the same in a few days under the title of 'The History of Cardiff Nonconformity from the Origin to 1900.' The publisher is Mr. Alenson, of Ivy Lane, Paternoster Row.

Professor R. Y. Tyrrell has compiled for Messrs. Macmillan an 'Anthology of Latin Poetry,' designed to illustrate his well-known lectures on Latin poetry.

Mr. John Long will shortly publish a new novel, by Mr. J. S. Fletcher, entitled 'The Three Days' Terror,' and purporting to be a description of an attack upon London by a secret society whose members are in possession of a marvellous destructive force.

Messrs. P. S. King & Son, of Orchard House, Westminster, have in hand a revised and enlarged second edition of 'The Cottage Homes of England: the Case against the Housing System in Rural Districts,' by Walter Crotch.

The series of 'occult books,' including the works of Arthur E. Waite (Black Magic, Devil Worship in France, &c.), published by Mr. George Redway, have now been taken over by Mr. Frank Hollings, 7 Great Turnstile, Holborn, W.C.

A large Rembrandt photogravure (17 in. by 14 in.) of the funeral procession of Queen Victoria passing Apsley House will be presented with Part 1 of the Memorial Edition of 'The Queen's London,' which will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. on March 13. For this edition a collection of views of the funeral procession are being prepared, and a number of new pictures will be added to the work.

Messrs. Methuen are issuing a new number of their 'Little Library'—Thackeray's

'Pendennis'—with an introduction and notes by Stephen Gwynn, and a frontispiece in each of the three volumes.

They are also about to bring out a new volume of the Churchman's Bible—'The General Epistle of St. James,' edited with an explanation by H. W. Fulford.

Temple Bar for March has a very interesting article on the 'London Factory Girl,' by a writer who is evidently familiar with both her foibles and her finer qualities, and believes that the latter will eventually predominate.

The March number of the Genealogical Magazine will be devoted almost entirely to the subject of 'The Demise of the Crown.' It will give the official account with numerous explanatory notes and references.

Mr. John Long has a third edition of 'The Master Sinner' in the press.

Until we received a copy of No. 1 of The Art Record, a Weekly Illustrated Review of the Arts and Crafts, we had no idea that 'there does not appear to have been any serious attempt to establish a weekly newspaper devoted entirely to art matters.' There certainly seems to be a field for this nicely got-up little paper, edited by Mr. Arthur E. Phillips, and we wish it success. The price is twopence. It is published at 435 Strand, London.

This year the popular illustrated hand-book, 'Pictures of the Year,' i.e. those exhibited at the Royal Academy and the New Gallery, will be published as an Extra Number of the Pall Mall Magazine.

Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. are early in the field with a 'Life' of the King. The book is entitled 'King and Emperor: the Life History of Edward VII.' It is 'popular' in style, and will be freely illustrated. Arthur Mee is the author.

The author of 'With Kitchener's Army' is narrating his unique experiences as a chaplain in the Boer War under the title of 'Chaplains at the Front, by One of them.' A chaplain's view of the operations should form interesting reading. The volume is illustrated with forty-six original illustrations from photos taken on the field. Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. are the publishers.

Mr. Karl W. Hiersemann, of Leipzig, has just published a reproduction (limited to 100 copies) of 'Der Totentanz,' a block book of about 1465, with an introduction by W. L. Schreiber.

BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

At the last monthly meeting of the Board, the President, Mr. Charles James Longman, in the chair, the sum of £99. 7s. 8d. was voted for the relief of fifty-eight members and widows of members, and before proceeding with the ordinary business it was unanimously resolved that the following address, conveying the respectful sympathy of the members on the lamented death of her late Majesty the Queen, be sent to his Majesty the King:—

'The members of the Booksellers' Provident Institution, with their humble duty, tender respectfully to their Majesties the King and Queen and to the Royal Family an expression of their heartfelt sympathy in the great loss which they have sustained, and which has created such a general feeling throughout the British Empire of deep grief, in the death of her late Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria.

'The members of the Booksellers' Provident Institution wish to pay a tribute of sincere respect to the memory of a sovereign who, through a long and glorious reign, was unremitting in her devotion to the manifold duties of her exalted station, and who endeared herself to all her subjects by her sympathy with them in their joys and sorrows.

'Her Majesty was a donor to the Booksellers' Provident Institution, and its Patron for more than thirty years previous to her decease.

'The Institution and all its members will never forget the memory of a Queen who, herself a successful author, took so lively a personal interest in the welfare of an Institution formed for the purpose of assisting those booksellers and their assistants who fall into poverty.

'The members of the Booksellers' Provident Institution, with their humble duty, also beg leave to submit to the King's Most Excellent Majesty their respectful congratulations on his accession to the Throne, and to assure his Majesty of their loyal attachment to his person.

'It is their earnest prayer that his Majesty may be blessed with a long and happy reign.'

SEASIDE HOLIDAY HOME FOR BOOKSELLERS.

The annual general meeting took place on Thursday, the 21st inst., at the Sunday School Union, the President, Mr. Charles James Longman, in the chair. Among the gentlemen present were Mr. Richard Bentley, Mr. J. W. Darton, Mr. J. Shaylor, Mr. F. Hanson, Mr. J. Houlston, Mr. W. Bartram, Mr. C. Buckland, Mr. E. Hayward, Mr. C. Ashley, and Mr. C. Twallin.

The committee, in their report, stated that the receipts from all sources had been increased, and that the total number of visitors during the year had been larger than ever, showing that as the Home became better known it was more appreciated.

The chairman expressed his gratification at the fact that the finances and the general state of the Home were in a satisfactory condition.

Mr. Richard Bentley moved, and Mr. Darton seconded, the adoption of the report—the resolution being carried unanimously—and other resolutions re-electing the various officers for the ensuing year were passed, Mr. Shaylor remarking on the deep interest which the President, Mr. C. J. Longman, always took in the affairs of the Home.

FORMATION OF AN AMERICAN BOOK-SELLERS' ASSOCIATION

'Under the auspices of representative retailers the "American Booksellers' Association" is now being organised, with Mr. J. W. Nichols as corresponding secretary, "to co-operate with the American Publishers' Association," and it is stated that upwards of 600 retailers have sent in their applications for membership on a basis of membership fees at $2 a year. If the gentlemen of the committee give their careful and continuous attention to the development of this organisation, it ought to be of great value in working out from the retailers' side the problems before the trade. Probably the successful plan of dealing with the discount question will come from direct relation between the publishers selling and the retailers buying from them to sell again. But it is, nevertheless, highly desirable that an association on the retailers' side, as well as one on the publishers' side, should be prepared to join in the wider co-operation desirable throughout the book-trade.'—New York Publishers' Weekly.

THE OVER-PRODUCTION OF SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—In the last issue of your journal you are good enough to give us an interesting and amusing leader on the over-production of the six-shilling novel.

As a publisher with no particular liking for the six-shilling novel I venture to agree with you, that this class of literature has become a drug in the market, and has been so for some years. But what will come as a surprise to most of your readers is the inference that publishers do not look to the profit and loss of each novel issued by them. Can it be that there are such who bring out books without going into the net result of profit and loss? I think not. The list, no doubt, is before them, not only during the day but also at night, disturbing their otherwise peaceful slumbers, and causing them to rise in the morning with an unpleasant taste in the mouth.

Is not an explanation more likely to be found in the thought that the next novel is going to wipe out all the losses sustained in the previous bad ones, and thus the publisher goes on, hoping against hope, until, alas! even that goes, and nothing is left but—the remainder man!

There never was a time like the present, in which unknown authors are passed by, for the bookseller is only too glad to meet the traveller's argument with the usual stereotyped reply, 'New author? Umph! No, thanks! Good morning.'

The unfortunate result of this lack of appreciation is, that the new author (who fondly imagines himself equal to a Kipling, Hall Caine, or an Anthony Hope) is dissatisfied, and blames the publisher. (Poor publisher!)

But the gratitude of the latter is surely due to you for providing a way out of the difficulty, viz.: that the Authors' Society should step in and help these unknown brethren of the pen by publishing their books and—make them pay. A brilliant idea!

What have we been doing all these years that no one until now has thought it worth the trouble to come forward with a remedy?

We congratulate you, Sir, on your boldness in coming to our aid.

What untold wealth is in store for the Authors' Society? Of course, they will produce the books on the lines laid down in their official handbook, i.e. 'the cost of production'!

A host of men and women will soon be crowding the steps of the Society's offices with MSS. ready for the press, for as you say, or rather Sir Walter Besant does, 'there is no risk' and—no remainders!

With such excellent possibilities before us we should feel happy (fancy a publisher feeling happy!), and it is to be sincerely hoped that the Authors' Society will lose no time in taking advantage of your advice and get to work as speedily as possible.

Yours faithfully,

R. A. EVERETT.

[Our remarks only applied to the over-production of ordinary commonplace novels.—Ed.]

OVER-PRODUCTION.

SIR,—In your leading article of the 23rd inst. you suggest that it would be well for every publisher to keep before him the net result in either profit or loss of each novel published.

This remark, I think, applies with equal force to all books, and, taught by my own practical experience in publishing, I have always urged on my clients the necessity for both (1) a careful estimate of the probable cost of production, and results to be obtained from each book at the time it is first taken in hand; and (2) a continuous record of its actual cost and results.

The estimate and the actual record can, I think, be most conveniently kept on the card system, by which two cards are allotted to each book, one for the original estimate, and the other for the record of actual figures; the latter should be written up to date, every quarter for preference, but, at all events, every twelve months; and I am sure that a careful study of the cards will amply repay the publisher.

The cards are easily kept in alphabetical order, so that any particular card is readily found, and the history of every book, from the date of its inception to the date of its death, is easily accessible.

Yours faithfully,

H. WINGFIELD, F.C.A.

WORKS OF H. D. THOREAU.

SIR,—About two years ago an announcement appeared in your columns to the effect that admirers of H. D. Thoreau would be pleased to learn that in all probability some further volumes of his journals would be added to the four already published.

There is little doubt that his works are becoming better known every day, and such an addition would be very welcome to a great many on both sides of the Atlantic.

Can you inform such admirers if the announcement is likely to be fulfilled?

I am, Sir,

Yours faithfully,

A. P.

We see from 'The English Catalogue of Books for 1900' that in November 1899 the Marion Press, of New York, published some 'Unpublished Letters' of H. D. and Sophia Thoreau, edited, with a preface, by S. A. Jones. 122 pp. cr. 8vo. We have heard of nothing since this.—ED. PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.]

NEWSPAPER AND MAGAZINE STATISTICS.

From the Newspaper Press Directory for 1901 (fifty-sixth annual issue) we ascertain that there are now published in the United Kingdom 2,488 newspapers, distributed as follows:—

England—
London ...	456
Provinces ...	1,488—1,944
Wales ...	108
Scotland ...	235
Ireland ...	181
Isles ...	20

Of these there are—

196 Daily Papers published in England
7 Ditto	Wales
19 Ditto	Scotland
20 Ditto	Ireland
5 Ditto	British Isles.

On reference to the first edition of this useful Directory for the year 1846 we find the following interesting facts—viz. that in that year there were published in the United Kingdom 551 Journals; of these 14 were issued daily—viz. 12 in England and 2 in Ireland; but in 1901 there are now established and circulated 2,488 papers, of which no less than 247 are issued daily, showing that the Press of the country has more than quintupled during the last fifty-five years. The increase in daily papers has been still more remarkable; the daily issues standing 247 against 14 in 1846.

As regards magazines it appears that there are now published in the United Kingdom 2,446 magazines, of which at least 536 are of a decidedly religious character. Comparing 1901 with 1846 (the first year the Directory was published), it is estimated that in that year there were only 200 of such publications in existence. Almost every branch of science, trade, and thought is now represented. The invaluable Newspaper Press Directory is published by C. Mitchell & Co., 1 and 2 Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct.

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF OTHER DAYS.

No. 5.—THOMAS GENT, PRINTER, OF YORK, 1691–1778.

Nothing was known of Thomas Gent's early history beyond what could be incidentally gathered from his own publications, until many years after his death, when a manuscript was discovered in his own handwriting by Mr. Thorpe, bookseller in Bedford Street, Covent Garden. The title was 'The Life of Mr. Thomas Gent, Printer, of York, written by himself.' It was written in 1746 when he was fifty-three years old, so that presumably he was born in 1693.* The volume was published by Mr. Thorpe in 1832. It is to this volume that I am chiefly indebted for the matter which forms this sketch.

It is a story of hardships bravely borne, described sometimes with quaint unconscious humour—of success sometimes within his grasp, but never really attained, and of a disastrous ending. Southey, mentioning him in 'The Doctor,' says the volume 'contains much information relating to the state of the press in his days, and the trade of literature.' It would be quite impossible, and I think uninteresting, to go into dry details of this description.

Gent was a native of Ireland. It so happened, however, when Mr. Thorpe came to print the book, three closely printed folios were missing, the first, the third, and the ninth. Doubtless the first contained an account of his

* At the end of the book it is stated that he died May 19, 1778, in his 85th year, in that case he must have been born in 1691 or 1692.

parentage and his childhood. His parents were resident in Ireland, and when the story begins he was apprenticed to a printer in Dublin, who by his own account treated him so badly that, after having served from the age of twelve or thirteen to sixteen or seventeen, he ran away, and it is at this point the MS. begins. He got a shilling from his mother, gave her and his father a farewell kiss, and, without a hint as to where he was going, he started with three small loaves of bread and sevenpence in his pocket. He managed to creep unperceived into the hold of Captain Wharton's ship just starting for England, and there was hidden when his father and master came aboard in search of him, but he was not discovered.

On the fourth day, after a very rough passage, the ship reached England. Knowing that his stock of cash would not pay for his passage, he tremblingly approached Captain Wharton and offered him his waistcoat.

'Pretty lad,' said the captain, 'why, if I were to strip you of your rayment you might happen to be starved to death; had my sailors told me you were hid in my ship, upon my word, you should have been delivered up to your friends. What will your parents think? Here, young lad, take this sixpence, endeavour to get employment, and take to good ways.'

Gent, with tears, thanked the good old captain, and told him that if he ever met him again he would recompense him.

He landed and set off on foot for Chester, but there was no printing office in Chester in those days, so he started at once for London, and on the way was near being kidnapped by a company of recruiting soldiers, and after other adventures, footsore, weary, and famishing, he reached St. Albans; there a good landlord and his wife took pity on him, gave him a good supper and sent him to bed.

At this point the narrative is interrupted by the second missing leaf, and when it resumes we find our hero in London, in the employ of a Mr. Midwinter, a printer, who carried on his trade at Pie Corner. There he made the acquaintance of a Dublin schoolfellow, son of Sir Richard Levintz, who took him about London to see the sights; he was a very handsome young fellow, of good character, about to start on his travels in the East, and Mrs. Midwinter, seeing that her apprentice had such an honourable acquaintance, began to treat him with greater respect than before.

He was now about twenty years old, and had been seven years at the trade, including his Dublin time; his master had usually treated him with great cruelty, and had recently given him a thrashing because he had told him that he was sadly in want of a pair of breeches, but he now, to his surprise, began 'to show a glorious spirit of generosity' towards him. Gent had with great pains taken down a sermon by Dr. Sacheverel after his suspension, by the printing of which his master made near £30 in one week. Midwinter sent for him, presented him with a crown piece, and told him that as he had now been seven years at the business he might have his freedom and work with whom he pleased.

Upon their asking me what money I had I told them my poor stock amounted to a tester; that indeed I had a shilling, but sixpence of it went to pay for a letter that my dear mother happily sent me, wherein, considering my condition, she had ordered me forty shillings and half a dozen shirts, to be received from Mr. Gunnell, in Throgmorton Street.

He then engaged with Mrs. Bradford, a Quaker and widow in Fetter Lane, who treated him kindly, and before the week was out he had earned 17s., and having £3 in the bank and a new suit of clothes of £3 price which Mr. Midwinter had given him; he thought himself very well off in the world; with this money he bought a new composing stick, a pair of scissors, a sliding box to contain them, a galley, and other appurtenances.

Not knowing when he was well off, he left the widow, and engaged with a Mr. Mears, in Blackfriars. In his office he was called upon to pay Ben-money, and was initiated into some of the mysteries of the trade. He was obliged to submit to what he says was the immemorial custom.

'I was dubbed,' says he, 'as great a cuz as the famous Don Quixote. It commenced by walking round the chapel singing an alphabetical anthem, tuned literally to the vowels; striking me, kneeling, with a broad sword; and pouring ale upon my head. My titles were exhibited much to this effect: "Thomas Gent, Baron of College Green, Earl of Fingal, . . . and Lord High Admiral of all the boys in Ireland, &c."'

After this initiation it was a matter of surprise to him to find that he was still regarded as a 'foreigner,' and in a fortnight's time he was discharged, not having as yet taken up his freedom. 'This,' says he, 'was like a javelin to my soul, especially when I thought I had left Mrs. Bradford, in whose house I had lived without envy or danger.'

After this he became a 'smoulder,' that is, he jobbed about from one office to another, and this kind of work afforded him a tolerable subsistence, and made him just a little proud, so that when he met Mears he did not show him 'the least respect but scorn.'

After some months had passed he heard of a Mr. White, of York, who wanted a journeyman at the business. Mr. White offered him £18 a year, besides board, washing, and lodging. He agreed, and, on April 12, 1714, he set off on foot from London for York. On his arrival, he says,

The first house I entered to inquire for my new master was in a printer's at Petergate—the very dwelling that is now my own, by purchase; but not finding Mr. White therein, a child brought me to his door, which was opened by the head maiden, that is now my dear spouse. She ushered me into the chamber where Mrs. White lay something ill in bed, but the old gentleman was at his dinner by the fireside, sitting in a noble armchair with a good large pie before him, and made me partake heartily with him. I had a guinea in my shoe lining, which I pulled out to ease my foot; at which the old gentleman smiled and pleasantly said it was more than he had ever seen a journeyman save before. I could not but smile too, because that my trunk, with my clothes and eight guineas, was sent about a month before to Ireland, where I was resolved to go and see my friends, had his place not offered to me as it did.

Mr. White had plenty of business to employ several persons, there being few printers in England at that time except in London. He was King's printer for York and five counties, which appointment he obtained through having printed the Prince of Orange's declaration when it had been refused by all the printers in London. The death of Queen Anne at Kensington, on July 29, occasioned the proclamation of King George I. on August 3 following, at York, and 'it was,' says Gent, 'on the steps of the magnificent cathedral that I perceived the comely, tall presence of the most illustrious prelate Sir William Dawes, the Archbishop, in company with the Lord Mayor and chief citizens by whom the ceremony was performed.'

He made himself as comfortable as possible with Mr. White till his year was out, but he would not agree to stay with him any longer till he had seen his friends in Ireland. Meanwhile he 'vented the diversity of his flowing passions' in a long poem of thirty-six stanzas, in which he tells the story of his early days and his various adventures down to the time of writing. I will quote the first two verses and the last but one. The first verse presents the kingdom of Ireland in the eighteenth century as in a more happy state of peace and contentment than that in which it has been customary to regard it during the nineteenth century.

In fair Hibernia first I sucked in breath,
A pleasant isle, where spreading plenty flows,
A kingdom, which, of all the realms on earth,
Is sure most happy, free from mortal foes,
Where wars and animosities do cease,
And, 'midst of war, enjoys a silent peace.
Of meek and gentle parents dear I came,
Whose great delight was once in me their son;
Who though for greatness they bore not a name,
Yet for proxime virtue, bright have shewn;
Were rich in grace, though not in glittering ore,—
They had enough, and who need value more?

On March 4, A Diary of the Unionist Parliament, by H. W. Lucy, illustrated by E. T. Reed; on March 29, Observations of Henry, by Jerome K. Jerome; The Early Stars, by Albert Kinross; The 'Chicot' Papers, by Keble Howard, illustrated by Tom Browne; The Good Red Earth, by Eden Phillpotts; Book of Short Stories, by the late Grant Allen; Cricket Anecdotes, by C. W. Alcock; Impertinent Dialogues, by Cosmo Hamilton; Red-headed Gill, by Rye Owen; A Risky Experiment, by Theo. Slater; on March 4, Sesa, by H. St. John Raikes. Quite a little stir has been created in Germany by the adoption of 'Three Men on the Bummel' as a 'class book' for higher students studying English. This a rare compliment, for the German schoolman takes his business very seriously.

The Fatal Opulence of Bishops, an essay on a Neglected Ingredient of Church Reform, by the Rev. Hubert Handley, M.A. 'There is believed to be need for a book which shall be at once courteous and downright; which, honouring the persons, the virtues, the calling of our bishops, shall yet inflexibly say what, perhaps, more and more of English Christians are coming to think—that the present episcopal social estate is to our country a religious misfortune.' Encyclopædia Biblica, a dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 1 A to D, Vol. 2, E to K, ready, Vol. 3 in the press, edited by the Rev. T. K. Cheyne, M.A., D.D., J. Sutherland Black, M.A., LL.D., Assistant Editor of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica,' assisted by many contributors in Great Britain, Europe, and America (to be completed in four volumes); Clue, a guide through Greek to Hebrew Scripture, by Edwin A. Abbott, author of 'St. Thomas of Canterbury' &c. This work aims at demonstrating that parts of the Synoptic Gospels are based upon a common original Hebrew document, not Aramaic, but Hebrew in the strict sense—'Biblical Hebrew.' The Corrections of Mark, adopted by Matthew and Luke, by Edwin A. Abbott. This volume gives a complete list of all the deviations from Mark adopted jointly by Matthew and Luke in what is conveniently called the Triple, or Synoptic, Tradition. Harnack, translated by Stewart Means, and edited by Thomas Bailey Saunders. This booklet is a translation of an article contributed to Herzog's 'Real-Encyclopædie' (third edition) by the first of living German theologians. It gives a survey of the growth and development of the creeds of Christendom, of the historical and critical questions connected therewith, and of the conclusions reached by the best scholars. Christianity and History, by Prof. Adolf Harnack, translated, with the author's sanction, by Thomas Bailey Saunders, second and revised edition; the new volume in the Guild Library is Scottish Cathedrals and Abbeys, by the Rev. D. Butler, M.A.; and in the 'Guild Text Books' the new volume is Studies in the Acts of the Apostles, by the Rev. Wm. Robertson, M.A.; in preparation, War Impressions, being a Record in Colour of the South African Campaign, by Mortimer Menpes, transcribed by Dorothy Menpes. The chief feature of this book will be 97 page illustrations in colour, of which a large number are portraits, sketched, by permission, on the field. These include Earl Roberts, Sir Alfred Milner, Cecil Rhodes, Generals French, Macdonald, and Pole Carew, and practically everyone whom the campaign has brought into prominence. Other subjects of illustration are Boer prisoners on their way from Paardeberg, Modder River, C.I.V.s in camp, and Lord Roberts watching the Battle of Osfontein. The volume also contains a series of autograph letters, in facsimile, from Earl Roberts and several of the Generals, as well as reproductions of a Boer doctor's letter, and a Boer plan of the Battle of Magersfontein. National Life from the Standpoint of Science, by Karl Pearson; The Use of Words in Reasoning, by Alfred Sidgwick: the general aim of this book is to discuss the nature of the difference between good and bad reasoning. The Social Life of Scotland in the Eighteenth Century, by the Rev. Henry Grey Graham; Money and Essays on Present Monetary Problems, by J. Shield Nicholson, fifth edition, revised and enlarged; The Scott Country, by W. S. Crockett, with 200 illustrations. Mr. W. S. Crockett's book on 'The Scott Country' will tell the story of the famous Borderland and its undying associations with Sir Walter. with the adventures of his earlier unregenerate days before he became a preacher—the scene of the story is laid in Maidstone, and the capture of that town by the Commonwealth soldiers in 1648 is described in the work; An Eventful Life, an autobiography by the Rev. A. J. Harrison, a record of a strong character, in boyhood a sceptic, then a Methodist preacher, and now for thirty years a parson in the Church of England, full of thrilling incidents; the Century Science Series, cheap edition in monthly volumes: just published—Michael Faraday: his Life and Work, by Professor Silvanus P. Thompson, and Charles Darwin, and the Theory of Natural Selection, by E. B. Poulton, F.R.S.; to be followed by The Herschels and Modern Astronomy, by Agnes M. Clerke; Pasteur, by Percy Frankland, B.Sc. (Lond.), F.R.S., and Mrs. Percy Frankland; James Clerk Maxwell and Modern Physics, by R. T. Markham, C.B., F.R.S.; Justus Von Liebig, His Life and Work, by W. A. Shenstone, F.I.C.; Charles Lyell and Modern Geology, by Professor T. G. Bonney, F.R.S.; John Dalton and the Rise of Modern Chemistry, by Sir Henry E. Roscoe, D.C.L., F.R.S. The North-West Passage by Land, by Lord Milton and Dr. Cheadle, cheap edition—this work contains a narrative of an expedition across the continent of North America, through the Hudson's Bay Territories, into British Columbia by one of the northern passes in the Rocky Mountains; new volumes of 'Work' Handbooks, edited by Paul N. Hasluck, editor of 'Work,' and 'Building Work': Bamboo Work, with 177 engravings and diagrams; Taxidermy, with 108 engravings and diagrams; Tailoring, with 180 engravings and diagrams. R.H.S. Curves, by Prof. R. H. Smith, a set of 23 scaled curve templates, in cardboard box, with explanatory pamphlet—the remarkable superiority of these curve templates as helps in artistic and technical drawings, and in physical diagrams, over the hitherto commonly used 'French curves,' 'slip curves' and 'splines,' results mainly from their strictly scientific and yet simple design, which gives them their peculiar characteristic of homogeneity, or oneness of shape throughout each template; Cassell's 'Eyes and No Eyes' series, entirely new and original readers for schools, by Arabella Buckley, author of 'Life and Her Children,' 'The Fairyland of Science,' &c., with numerous original illustrations and coloured plates in six books—a series of the most delightful lessons on country objects, which, though specially prepared for children in the country, will be almost equally acceptable in suburban districts of our large cities—the illustrations are a special feature of the books, no trouble or expense has been spared to secure excellent original drawings, and the coloured plates are executed in the best style; A Practical Method of Teaching Geography (England and Wales—Part 2), agricultural industries, seaports, sectional maps and continental connections with the British Isles, by J. H. Overton—this work is intended to complete the series of maps given in Part 1 of England and Wales, by exercises showing the agricultural and fishing industries together with the Naval and Railway Centres; New Sixpenny Editions: Adam Hepburn's Vow, by Annie S. Swan, and The Sea Wolves, by Max Pemberton; Queen Victoria: Her Life in Portraits, containing a magnificent collection of exquisitely produced portraits of Queen Victoria, printed on art paper; Pictorial Practical Fruit Growing, a concise manual giving instructions for the management of every important fruit in culti-

A Soldier of the King

By DORA M. JONES.

The romantic story of John Gifford, the original of Bunyan's Evangelist, though well known to students of Bunyan's early life, has never yet been made the subject of a novel. Gifford was a wild cavalier before he became a preacher, and the adventures of his earlier unregenerate days form the subject of 'A Soldier of the King.' The scene of the story is laid chiefly in Maidstone, and it includes the most picturesque episode in the history of that ancient town—its capture by the Commonwealth soldiers in 1648.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.

The Times Life of Queen Victoria, elaborately and superbly illustrated. This will undoubtedly be the finest work on the subject, but the exact form of it, and number and size of the pictures, can only now be said to be under consideration. Further particulars will be duly announced. The Times History of the War in South Africa, 1899-1900, the second volume very nearly ready; to be completed in 5 (or 6) volumes. This History, which has been in course of preparation for many months, is being written by several of the special correspondents of the Times in South Africa, and by other well-known authorities. Edited by Mr. R. S. Amery, Fellow of All Souls, Oxford. Profusely illustrated with photogravure portraits by the Rembrandt Intaglio Process, and by maps and battle plans. The Royal Navy from the Earliest Times to the Present, by William Laird Clowes, illustrated by photogravure portraits, maps, plans, &c. Volume VI., completing the work, is now nearly ready, each volume complete in itself, with an index; Britain's Austral Empire, portraits of the statesmen and officials concerned in the work of establishing the Commonwealth of Australia, the portraits, from life, drawn by Percy F. S. Spence, the letterpress by G. Firth Scott.—The book will consist of forty photogravures, 7 inches by 4½ inches, while the letterpress will be printed on imperial hand-made paper at the well-known Chiswick Press. The whole will be contained in a portfolio of white vellum and cloth, ornamented with a design by Mr. Spence. Only two hundred and fifty copies will be available in this form. The illustrations, reproduced by photogravure, will be portraits drawn (where possible) from life of all the leading statesmen, Imperial and Colonial, and officials connected with the Federal movement from its inception to the culmination, and, at the same time, the termination of its career, by the issuing of the Royal Assent to the Australian Commonwealth Enabling Bill. The letterpress, which will consist of a brief outline giving the salient features of the Federation movement in Australia, and an account of the various personalities whose influence has been from time to time a dominant factor in its development, will be by Mr. G. Firth Scott, whose 'Romance of Australian Exploring,' and other works dealing with Australia, are well known. Mary Queen of Scots, and Who Wrote the Casket Letters, by Samuel Cowan, J.P., of the Perthshire Advertiser. In the press, in two volumes.—The forthcoming work gives a history of the life and reign of the Queen of Scots, from her accession to the throne in 1561 until her death. This period includes some of the most remarkable chapters in the history of Scotland, e.g. the murder of Darnley; the Bothwell marriage; the betrayal of the Queen at Carberry Hill; her imprisonment at Lochleven; her abduction and escape; the Casket Letters; the Babington Conspiracy and trial at Fotheringhay; all these have been controversial questions in Queen

Mary's life. A special feature of this edition of Queen Mary's life will be the illustrations. It will contain sixteen photogravures of the Queen, all more or less famous portraits, and several of them never before published. William Black's Novels, thirty-three volumes, an entirely new re-issue, in uniform, cheap, but handsome binding, four volumes published in February, and four in March. Now ready: Macleod of Dare; Kilmeny; Green Pastures; Maid of Killeena. To be issued in March: Beautiful Wretch; In Silk Attire; Sunrise; In Far Lochaber. These will be followed by a similar monthly issue of Mr. Black's other novels in due course; The Bible for the Young, a series for schools and families, by the Rev. J. Paterson Smyth, B.D., LL.D.; the following five volumes are in preparation:—Genesis, Joshua, Judges, St. Matthew and St. Mark; the Prayer Book (other volumes in preparation); The Green Horse in Ladysmith, by Lt.-Col. St. John C. Gore (this work has been printed for private circulation); Good House Keeping is the title of a new American magazine, beautifully illustrated, price sixpence monthly; Oriental Rugs, by J. K. Mumford, with 16 colour plates from selected rugs, and 16 artotypes and photo engravings. —'Oriental Rugs' is the brief title of a most valuable and interesting work by John Kimerley Mumford.—The author is a collector of rugs, and by years of study has become recognised as an expert.—He has travelled widely through the East, collecting material for this work, which contains sixteen photocromes (colour-plates) produced by a new process, eight artotypes of designs rather than colours, eight half-tone illustrations from the author's photographs, and two maps. These with the text of over 300 pages form a superb quarto volume, in handsome binding; A Hidden Foe, a novel by G. A. Henty, in one volume, with illustrations by Percy Spence; A Manual of Pushtu, by Captain G. Roos-Keppel, President of Central Committee of Examination in the Pushtu Language; Jackson's German Copybook, a graduated course of exercises in Modern German Handwriting, by John Jackson, F.E.L.S.; Model and Blackboard Drawing, by F. F. Lydon; Ambidextrous and Free-arm Blackboard Drawing and Design, by F. F. Lydon; New Methods in Education, art, real manual training, nature study, by J. Liberty Tadd. Student's edition, for use of teachers and pupils. Slightly abridged, printed from the same plates as édition de luxe, but on thinner paper with less margins, without portrait. A Triennial Catalogue completing the Century. The three Annual Volumes which it will embrace with much additional matter, the first, that for 1898, is quite out of print; the second, that for 1899, may also be said to be out of print, for there are only a very few copies left, whilst the present volume for 1900 has been wholly subscribed for before publication. Of course with the utmost pressure this Triennial Volume cannot be ready for some months, the amalgamation, re-arrangement, and the addition of new matter requiring very great care and much time. An Old Man's Holidays, by 'The Amateur Angler,' second edition; Famous Horses, by Theo Taunton, new edition, with portraits, pedigrees, principal performances, descriptions of races, and various interesting items, extending over a period of nearly two centuries, with 200 portraits. This new edition has been brought up to date. Thynne Lynn's Elementary Astronomical Works: Celestial Motions, a handy book of Astronomy, by William Thynne, B.A., F.R.A.S. (formerly of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich), 10th edition, revised; Remarkable Comets, a brief survey of the most interesting facts in the history of Cometary Astronomy, 9th edition; Remarkable Eclipses, 5th edition.

Jose, an historical review of the development of Greater Britain, with maps and diagrams; The Growth of Greater Britain, a reader for schools, compiled and edited by Elizabeth Lee; The Autobiography of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Harry Smith, Bart., of Aliwal, G.C.B., including his services in South America, in the Peninsula and France, at New Orleans, at Waterloo, in North America and Jamaica, in South Africa during the Kaffir War, in India during the Sikh War, and at the Cape, &c., edited by G. C. Moore Smith, with some additional chapters supplied by him, 2 vols.; The Dawn of Modern Geography, a history of exploration and geographical science from the opening of the Tenth to the middle of the Thirteenth Century, A.D. 900-1250, by C. Raymond Beazley, Fellow of Merton College, Oxford, with maps and illustrations; The Greek and Persian War, by G. Brendon Grundy. This book will deal in detail with the campaign of Marathon, and with those of the years 480-479 B.C. The author has personally examined the scenes of the great events recorded, and has made surveys of Thermopylæ and Plataea for the purpose of the work. Illustrated by maps, photographs, and sketches of the main sites of interest; The Frescoes in the Sixtine Chapel in Rome, by (Miss) Evelyn March Philipps, with illustrations; Notes from a Diary, by the Right Hon. Sir Mountstuart E. Grant Duff, G.C.M.G., fifth series, 1889-1900, 2 vols.; A Commentary on the Psalter, devotional and analytical, by the Rev. R. M. Benson, 3 vols.; Dangerous Trades, the historical, social, and legal aspects of industrial occupations as affecting public health, by a number of experts, edited by Dr. T. Oliver, M.A., M.D., F.R.C.P., with illustrations; The Greek Thinkers, by Prof. Theodore Gomperz, of Vienna University, 2 vols.; The Body of Christ, a study of the Institution and Doctrine of the Holy Communion, a new work by the Rev. Charles Gore, M.A., D.D., Canon of Westminster (ready in Lent); Speeches and Correspondence of Henry, fourth Earl of Carnarvon, on the Affairs of British North America, edited by the Hon. Sir Robert G. Herbert, G.C.B., with maps; The Truth about God, by Father John (Sergieff), translated by Col. E. E. Goulaeff, with the assistance of Mrs. Illingworth; a new edition of Crowe & Cavalcaselle's History of Painting. A History of Painting in Italy based on Materials drawn from the Archives of Italy, and from personal inspection of the Works of Art scattered throughout Europe, by J. A. Crowe and G. B. Cavalcaselle; Painting in Italy, Umbria, Florence, and Siena, from the second to the sixteenth century, three volumes, with upwards of 200 illustrations, with Editorial Notes by Prof. Langton Douglas, assisted by S. Arthur Strong, Librarian of the House of Lords; Painting in North Italy, Venice, Padua, Vicenza, Verona, Ferrara, Milan, Friuli, Brescia, from the fourteenth to the sixteenth century, 2 vols. (in contemplation). This standard work has been for many years out of print, and second-hand copies have commanded a very high price. The new edition will contain the final corrections of Sir Joseph Crowe, which, for the first two volumes at any rate, are so thorough as to amount in parts almost to a re-writing of the book.—In Tuscany, Tuscan towns, Tuscan types, the Tuscan tongue, &c., by Montgomery Carmichael, British Vice-Consul for West Tuscany, with numerous illustrations; Two new vols. in Mr. Murray's Musical Series are the Orchestra and Orchestral Music, by W. J. Henderson, with eight portraits and other illustrations, and Song and Song Writers, by Henry T. Finck, with eight portraits; How to Listen to Music, hints and suggestions to untaught lovers of the art, by Henry Edward Krehbiel, author of 'Studies in the Wagnerian Drama,' &c., with eleven portraits (new impression); Wild Wales, with a photogravure and twelve illustrations, by A. S. Hartrick; The Gypsies of Spain, their Manners, Customs, Religion, and Language, with a photogravure and eight full-page illustrations, by A. Wallis Mills; Murray's Handy Classical Maps: a New System, edited by G. Brendon Grundy, M.A., Brasenose College, Oxford. The maps in Sir William Smith's Classical Atlas, engraved at a cost of several thousands of pounds, are regarded as among the best of the kind in existence, but hitherto they have only been published in a costly form, practically inaccessible to school-boys and many students. Mr. G. B. Grundy, of Brasenose College, Oxford, whose name is a sufficient guarantee that the work will be done in the best and most scholarly manner, has undertaken to edit the series to bring it up to date in the light of modern research, and to make it suitable for school and college use. The form of their issue is entirely novel, and will, we think, commend itself to teachers. The maps will be published separately, mounted on cloth, with an index of names, and folded in a cover similar to those used for tourist and cycling maps, though somewhat larger. The Student's Gibbon, abridged from the original work by Sir Wm. Smith, D.C.L., LL.D., a new and revised edition in two parts (Part II. nearly ready), by J. G. C. Anderson, M.A.; (New edition) The Student's History of Rome, by H. G. Liddell, D.D., revised and in part re-written by P. V. M. Benecke, M.A., with coloured and other maps and numerous illustrations; The Student's Manual of English Literature, a new edition, thoroughly revised and in great part re-written, by A. Hamilton Thompson; Little Arthur's History of Greece, a companion volume to 'Little Arthur's England,' and 'Little Arthur's France,' by the Rev. A. S. Walpole, M.A., with maps and illustrations; Spanish Principia (Part I.), a First Spanish Course, by Don Fernando de Arteaga; A Greek Grammar for Schools, by John Thompson, M.A. One of the chief objects of this book is to bring within the reach of the younger generation of students and schoolboys some of the results of the linguistic discoveries of the present day. New editions of Handbooks: India and Ceylon, including Bengal, Bombay and Madras, The Punjab, N.-W. Provinces, Rajputana, The Native States, Assam, Cashmere, and Burma, with 55 maps and plans of towns and buildings, 4th edition, revised to date; Berkshire, almost entirely re-written, with maps, &c.; Northampton and Rutland, with maps and plans, forming the second edition.

Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons.

Messrs. T. Nelson & Sons have just added to their in every way admirable 'New Century Library' Scott's Antiquary and Rob Roy; Dickens' David Copperfield and American Notes; and Thackeray's Catherine and Barry Lyndon. Never were books produced in a more attractive, handy, and readable form, and it is not at all surprising that many other publishers have paid Messrs. Nelson the compliment of endeavouring, not always successfully, to imitate Messrs. Nelson's enterprise.

Mr. John C. Nimmo.

The new volume of the Semitic Series now ready is The Social Life of the Hebrews, by Rev. Edward Day. Mr. Nimmo is publishing in two volumes The Amusements of Old London, being a Survey of the Sports and Pastimes, Tea Gardens and Parks, Playhouses, and other Diversions of the People of London from the Seventeenth to the beginning of the Nineteenth Century, by William B. Boulton, with hand-coloured illustrations; A History of Steeple-Chasing, by William C. A. Blew, M.A., with coloured and other illustrations by Henry Alken; new illustrated edition of J. H. Jesse's Historical Works, 30 vols., illustrated with 200 etchings and photogravure plates printed on Japan paper, the text on a clear, soft, deckle-edge laid paper, cloth elegant, subscribers' names only accepted for the complete set; English Historical Memoirs, by John Heneage Jesse; Reminiscences of a Falconer, by Major C. H. Fisher. Mr. Nimmo will publish at the end of March a new and revised edition of A Handbook of British Birds, showing the distribution of the Resident and Migratory Species in the British Islands, with an Index to the Records of the Rarer Visitants, by J. E. Harting, F.L.S., F.Z.S., with 35 coloured plates carefully reproduced from original drawings by the late Prof. Schlegel.

Mr. David Nutt.

Mr. Nutt will publish the following works in the course of the next few months:—In the Tudor Translations, edited by William Ernest Henley: The Chronicle of Froissart, translated by John Bourchier, Lord Berners, with an introduction by Prof. W. P. Ker, vols. II–VI. (forming vols. XXVIII–XXXII.) of the Tudor Translations.—The first volume was sent out to subscribers in the first week of the present century. The issue (600 copies) is entirely exhausted. Should any copies be released by the death of subscribers, or any other reason, their price will be raised. The terminal number of the 'Tudor Translations' will be a reprint of the Authorised Version of the Bible. Full particulars respecting the number of volumes, and the terms of subscription, will be given in due course. In the meantime, and pending the issue of a formal application for subscription, provisional orders will be noted. A list of such numbers of the series as are still on sale may be had by application to the publisher or any bookseller; In the Grimm Library, vol. XII.: Studies on the Legend of Sir Lancelot du Lac, by Jessie L. Weston, translator of Wolfram von Eschenbach's Parzival, of Gottfried von Strassburg's Tristan, author of 'Legends of the Wagner Drama,' 'The Legend of Sir Gawain,' &c., prospectus with full particulars of extent and price will be sent out very shortly. Mr. Maynard's 'Wife of Bath's Tale,' formerly announced as vol. XII. of the series, will be issued as vol. XIII., and may be booked for about Easter. Special prospectus in due course; The Hidden Servants and other very old stories, told over again by Francesca Alexander, author of 'The Story of Ida,' 'Roadside Songs of Mr. David Nutt—continued.

Tuscany,' &c., printed on hand-made paper, in Kelmiscott type, at the Cambridge Press. Title in red and black, etched frontispiece. Miss Alexander's name is familiar to and beloved by all lovers of Italy and all lovers of Ruskin; A Garden of Simples, by Martha Bockée Flint.—The garden in which these simples are culled is a 'Colonial' one, one of those gardens of old New England and old New Holland; Town and Country Poems, by A. E. I. Legge; In Scottish History from Contemporary Writers: No. 4, The Chevalier de St. George and the Jacobite Movements in his Favour, 1701–1720, edited by Ch. Sanford Terry, 12 illustrations, comprising contemporary portraits and maps. With the same editor's 'The Rising of 1745,' published last year, the present work gives the pith of the contemporary literature, in which the Jacobite attempts to regain the British crown are described; Heartsease, a Cycle of Song.—The publisher believes that lovers of poetry and true critics will recognise in the writer, a woman, one with a rare capacity for the expression of 'simple and passionate' emotion; Under the title of The Ancient East will be issued a series of short, popular, but thoroughly scientific studies, by the leading scholars of Germany, setting forth the recent discoveries and investigations in Babylonian, Assyrian, and Egyptian History, Religion, and Archaeology, especially as they bear out the traditional views of early Eastern History. The German originals have been appearing during the last eighteen months. The English translations made by Miss Jane Hutchinson have been submitted in each case to the authors, and will embody their latest views. Short bibliographies are added. The following will be issued this year:—The Realms of the Dead in Ancient Egypt, by Professor Alfred Wiedemann; The Tell-el-Amarna Tablets, by Dr. C. Niebuhr; The Babylonian and Hebrew Genesis, by Professor H. Zimmern; The Babylonian Conception of Heaven and Hell, by Dr. Alfred Jeremias; The Political Development of Babylonia and Assyria, by Professor H. Winckler.

Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.

A third edition, revised, with additional illustrations, is just ready of General Wauchope, by William Baird, F.S.A. Scot. The new volumes in the 'Famous Scots' Series in preparation are: David Livingstone, by T. Banks MacLachlan; The Academic Gregories, by Agnes Grainger Stewart; Johnston of Warriston, by Rev. William Morison. Winsome Womanhood, Familiar Talks on Life and Conduct, by Margaret E. Sangster; China's Only Hope, an Appeal for Progress, by Chang Chi Tung, Viceroy of Liang-Hu, with Endorsement by the Emperor, and Introduction by Dr. Griffith John, translated by S. J. Woodbridge, with Portrait; The Siege in Peking, China against the World, by an Eye-witness, W. A. P. Martin, D.D., LL.D., with portraits, maps, and illustrations; Village Life in China, a Study in Sociology, by Arthur H.
